PLO facing new challenges to its survival

By FRANK PROCTOR

Since the Israeli invasion of Lebanon in summer 1982, the Palestine Liberation Organization has faced challenges to its survival as an independent organization, Professor Yaakov Goldberg said before 45 people in Hamilton Hall Monday.

Goldberg teaches at the Institute of Middle East Studies at the University of Tel Aviv in Israel.

Goldberg said the PLO was on the verge of complete domination by Syria. He added that it was the effort of PLO Chairman Yassir Arafat to preserve freedom of action by negotiating with Jordan that turned many PLO leaders against him. Many PLO members view Jordan as a potential competitor for the allegiance of the Palestinian people.

There is now a struggle going on for the

the more pro-Syrian leaders. Goldberg said latest reports indicate that Arafat is Goldberg said these challenges consisted of how to continue armed struggle in the present Middle East situation, how to reconcile itself to the desire of most Arab states for a political rather than military solution to problems in the area, and how to maintain unity within its own ranks.

Goldberg said it would be difficult for the PLO to continue its military struggle in the Middle East because for the first time since 1964 it no longer occupies any territory bordering Israel. He added that Arab states were not likely to allow the PLO to operate from their territory. They fear the PLO would drag them into a war

Goldberg said the PLO is now out of leadership of the PLO between Arafat and decided to temporarily avoid military confrontation with Israel in the wake of the Israeli invasion of Lebanon. However, the charter of the PLO commits it to "armed struggle" against Israel.

> This situation exacerbates a split within the PLO between those who wish to negotiate for a state of their own and those who want to continue the fight to destroy Israel, Goldberg said.

He said the PLO is not a unified body, but includes groups of all political orientations, from Marxist to pro-Western. With the elimination of Beirut as a Palestinian headquarters, PLO leaders have been dispersed to Libya, Tunisia, Iraq and Syria.

Such circumstances make communication and consultation very difficult, he said. Also, Goldberg added that this situation subjected PLO leaders to the political pressures of their host nations.

A 180-unit apartment complex was denied a special use

The proposal by Goforth Properties of Chapel Hill had been on the council agenda since June. The developer originally requested 233 apartments and 14 residential building lots off Old Oxford Road. When area residents expressed concern, Goforth reduced its proposed development to 180 apartments and 18 residential lots. As the issue stands now, developers must wait a year before resubmitting the proposal to the council. However, an earlier proposal might be acceptable if the area is re-zoned, Chapel Hill Town Attorney Grainger Barrett said.

The land is now zoned R-4, which council member Winston Broadfoot said was inappropriate. Broadfoot said there was no assurance that the land would not be developed further as R-4.

In search for a compromise, council member Bev Kawalec said there should be no stipulations on the number of units to be constructed. Kawalec said the square footage approved for Kennedy Apartments should be accepted for Oxford

To remind the council of its intention, Mayor Joe Nassif said, "We're not just sitting here to collect the numbers. There is such a thing as design. I nose buildings aren't designed to fit the site." Later in the meeting, the council unanimously approved a special use permit for Coventry Townhouses. Nassif said the townhouse site plan was a "tremendous job." "It's liveable there," he said, comparing it to the Oxford

Hills proposal. A proposal was also passed by the council to increase the acreage requirement for development and to impose related land-use restrictions. Broadfoot, who submitted the proposal, said he wanted to see the proposed changes go through the regular public hear-

"The timing could not be worse," said Gary Buck of the Homebuilder's Association. He said the regulation could not have so many flaws to require immediate review. He suggested the council wait until the water situation could be predicted.
