Those institutions will be UNC, Duke University, North Carolina State University, North Carolina A&T, UNC-Charlotte, Research Triangle Institute and the Microelectronics Center of North Carolina, said Alan Blatecky, Communications Engineer for MCNC. The Duke-UNC link is being done to test student, faculty and administration reactions to the new system, Blatecky said. MCNC anticipates the project will be completed by January of 1985.

Overall, the plan will cost $6.5 million, and will go beyond teleclass links, Blatecky said. It will include conferencing, by which researchers at two institutions can talk to each other or work together. It will also include connecting data systems among the different institutions, he said.

Next semester, UNC will provide three teleclass courses, and Duke will provide two. UNC's courses will include CS 145 in software engineering, CS 242 in operations systems, and CS 236 in graphics.

Duke courses available at UNC next semester will be VLSI in Sea moss, and VLSI in design.

MADRID, Spain — A Spanish jetliner got lost in fog and taxied into a Boeing 727 that was accelerating at about 100 mph prior to takeoff from Madrid airport Wednesday, setting off a fiery explosion that killed 93 people, officials said.

It was the second air disaster in Madrid in 10 days. One survivor of the latest crash, an American, said he thought neither plane should have been allowed to take off in the dense fog. The airport, which has no ground radar, had been closed to incoming flights.

Air traffic control officials said the collision occurred at 9:45 a.m. (3:45 a.m. EST) when an Iberia Air Lines Boeing 727 carrying 84 passengers and nine crew members, accelerated to take off toward the north for Rome. They said the pilot, after apparently spotting the other jet approaching on the ground, just managed to get the 727's nose up.

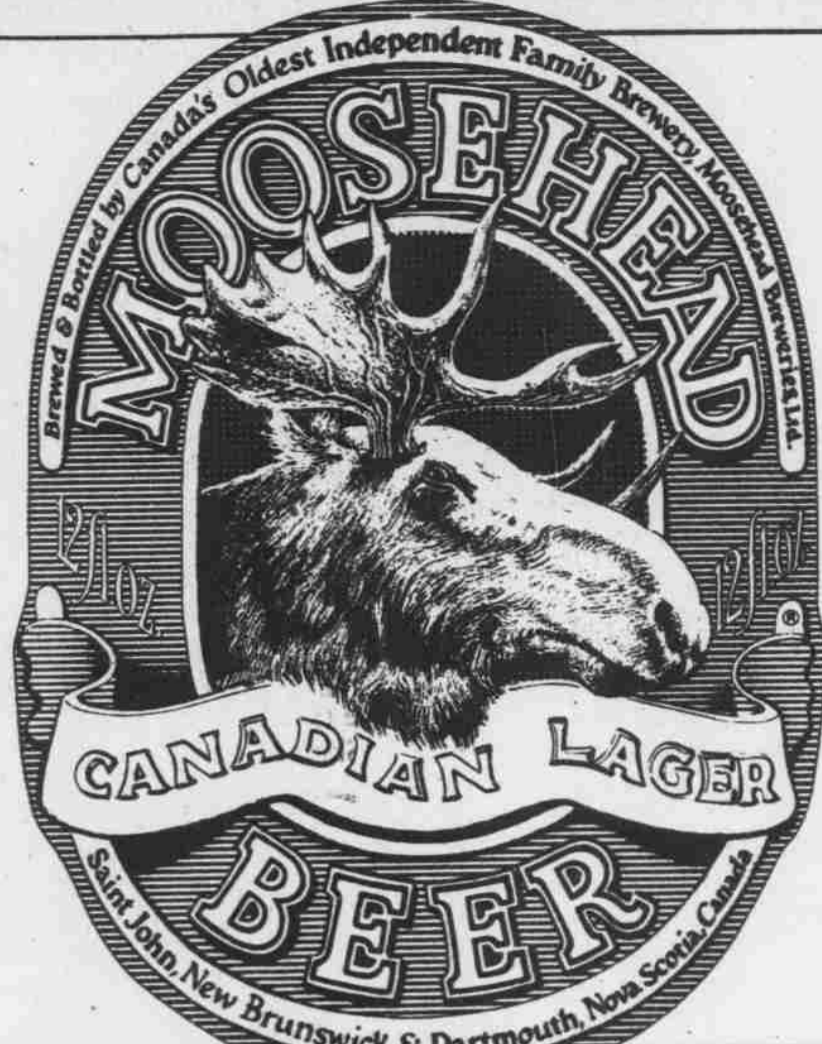

CAMP LEJEUNE — Marines who survived the Beirut bombing attack returned to a heroes' welcome Wednesday, 42 years after hundreds of other American servicemen died in the surprise attack on Pearl Harbor.

Bands, cheering spectators waving flags and tearful relatives greeted the 24th Marine Amphibious Unit, which has spent six violent months in Lebanon as part of a multinational peacekeeping force. Some 1,700 Marines landed at the North Carolina State Port at Morehead City, then were bused 60 miles to their base at Camp Lejeune.
