Gymnastics coach proud

By KIMBALL CROSSLEY
Staff Writer

It was March 23, the day before the North Carolina gymnastics team was to compete in the NCAA Southeastern Regionals, and coach Derek Galvin was worried.

Never mind that just a few days before Galvin had said, "I just have to be happy that we're here." Friday, Galvin was worried because, as he said, "We didn't look good in warm-ups."

Again never mind that just a few days before Galvin had said he was hoping for a fifth-place finish from his team in the six-team field. That fifth-place finish was very important to Galvin and the Tar Heels.

"That night I had a little get-together with the team," Galvin said. "I reminded them that our goal all year long was to get to the regionals, and that then, if we got there, to finish fifth. And that we had worked too hard, and sacrificed too much, endured too many aches and pains to get there — we had to go out and execute."

Galvin's own words told the story of what his team did the next day:

"It was our best meet of the season, even with the lower score," he said. "The judging was tighter."

UNC, which went into the meet seeded sixth, got its much-desired fifth with a score of 173.60, not quite as high as the school-record 174.65 the team set on two occasions this season, but high enough to make both Galvin and the women on the team happy about the whole season.

"They did extremely well," Galvin said. "They feel good about themselves."

And Galvin, like any coach, can't resist looking ahead.

"For such a young team to have such a good year makes the future look good," he said. "I think with the way we did this year and the way recruiting looks, it's possible within two or three years that we could go to the nationals."

Indeed this is a team with a lot of potential. They will lose just one competitor, senior Karen Kaiser, from a team that finished 21st nationally, the highest UNC ranking ever.

"She's probably been the most outstanding four-year gymnast we've ever had at Carolina," Galvin said of Kaiser, a Chapel Hill native.

Kaiser ended her UNC career on an up note. In her next to last meet she turned in a 9.2 in the floor exercise, a performance Galvin called "the nicest routine I've ever seen her do."

Galvin said he is proud of this team, and is eager to start on next year. "The momentum from the regionals will carry us right into next season."

Tar Heels face lacrosse challenge from Maryland

By MIKE WATERS
Staff Writer

Saturday's match with 10th-ranked Maryland on Fetzer Field will not be an easy one for Willie Scroggs' fourth-ranked Tar Heels. But why should this game be any different from the other tough outings North Carolina had earlier this season?

"Our schedule is as tough as anybody's — especially with Syracuse (No. 1), Navy (No. 8) and Delaware (No. 14) all in March," Scroggs said. "We're looking forward to playing Maryland, though."

Everything seems to be going right for UNC after the season-opening 10-9 loss to Syracuse. Defensively the Tar Heels have battered several opponents into submission.

Senior defenseman Randy Cox, along with sophomore Tom Haus and freshman Chris Walker, has made goalkeeping a part-time job for Tim Mealey. The midfielders and attackers have been brutal when North Carolina's foes attempt to clear the ball out of their own territory.

Navy had 15 unsuccessful clears and just 22 completed ones. Against Delaware on Wednesday, the Blue Hens were just no match for the Tar Heels, clearing only 24 times opposed to 19 unsuccessful attempts.

Mealey has been just short of spectacular in the cage the past two matches. Navy and Delaware combined to score just six goals in eight quarters against Mealey, who has an impressive .746 saves-versus-goals-allowed percentage this year.

The Tar Heels have been relying on the consistent play of five players on offense and one or two guest-stars each game. Junior Mac Ford leads the team with 17 points (11 goals and six assists) followed by Brent Voelkel, Terry Martinello and Joey and Gary Seivold.

"Mac handles the ball a lot for us and is going to have a lot of opportunities," Scroggs said. "Terry (Martinello) has a really good shot and is a competent goal-scorer."

Lately, Scroggs has gotten some inspired performances from senior Andy Smith, freshman Tim Welsh and sophomore Mike Tummillo, who returned to action against Delaware, still nursing a broken bone in one hand.

Maryland, which lost to Hofstra 10-7 last week, poses the toughest test of the season for UNC other than Syracuse. As recently as a week ago the Terrapins were ranked right behind UNC as the nation's fifth best team.

North Carolina has beaten Maryland just twice in the 20 meetings between the two schools. Last year, the Terps downed UNC 11-9 in College Park.

Maryland will be trying to continue its dominance over the Tar Heels under the guidance of its new coach, Dick Edell, who came in from a very successful stint at Army.

"Maryland is a very talented team with great quickness," Scroggs said. "They'll be anxious to play a game. They didn't want to lose the game with Hofstra."
