Plan to construct new apartment complex approved

By VANESSA WILLIAMS
Staff Writer

The Chapel Hill Planning Board unanimously approved a new 336-unit apartment and townhouse development plan Tuesday night to be built at the intersection of Airport Road and Piney Mountain Road.

The new apartment and townhouse complex, Misty Woods, will have 108 two-bedroom and 228 one-bedroom units, according to Don Kennedy of Bass, Nixon & Kennedy, Inc., consulting engineers for the project. The apartments, which will be owned by Barnett-Range Corp., will rent for $345 to $465 per month, he said. Construction of the project will begin by June, 1985.

The proposal for the apartments did not pass without some deliberation, however. Board member Pat Evans said she was concerned about traffic in the area after the apartments were completed. Evans said that a bus pull-off lane would be needed on Airport Road and Piney Mountain Road.

A representative of the Piney Mountain Development Association said that 336 units was a large number which should not be considered without careful thought. The representative said he was afraid that "if there were 3000 units no one would be surprised."

One resident of the Piney Mountain area said that she was worried about the increase in crime that such a swift population growth could cause.

The board also approved, by a vote of 5-3, a revised plan for a new McDonald's with a drive-through window to be built next to Hotel Europa. The plan, which had gone before the board three times, was approved because McDonald's had revised its plan to save more of the existing trees on the site and to provide more plants in the buffer between McDonald's and Hotel Europa.

Evans voiced concern that the McDonald's would make the traffic situation on U.S. 15-501 bypass more hazardous unless improvements are made. "I cannot feel that this is safe until the highway is improved," she said.

Board member Lightning Brown questioned the traffic safety in the parking lot of McDonald's. He was concerned that the drive-through window would cause traffic in the parking lot to back up and create a hazard.

Evans also suggested that filters be installed in the exhaust system of the McDonald's so that the smell of hamburgers would not drift up to the Hotel Europa swimming pool.

O'Brien's preliminary hearing postponed indefinitely

By KAREN YOUNGBLOOD
Staff Writer

The preliminary hearing for Chapel Hill Newspaper City Editor Sean O'Brien was postponed indefinitely Wednesday afternoon, pending the results from lab tests on two of the drug charges O'Brien is facing.

O'Brien was arrested February 19 on eight different charges: assault with a deadly weapon, assault with intent to kill, simple possession of marijuana, simple possession of cocaine, failure to stop for a blue light and siren, speeding to allude arrest, careless and reckless driving, and driving alongside the road. The second charge was later dropped.

O'Brien, who has worked for the Chapel Hill Newspaper for two years, was spotted sitting in his car in a parking lot. When a police officer approached O'Brien to question him, O'Brien drove toward the officer with his car. The officer, who was not injured, chased O'Brien for a mile to Mason Farm Road. O'Brien was apprehended when his car wrecked. O'Brien was released the same day on $600 bond.

Police said that O'Brien was alone at the time and there were no other suspected accomplices. He had not been under police surveillance, nor was he suspected of dealing drugs.

Orville Campbell, editor of the Chapel Hill Newspaper said that although O'Brien was currently not working at the paper, he was still on the company payroll. When asked if O'Brien would be asked to resign, Campbell said that would be determined after the trial.

Lunsford Long, O'Brien's attorney, refused to comment on the case.

Orange County commissioners approve increase in sales tax

By MIKE GUNZENHAUSER
Staff Writer

Orange County commissioners decided Monday night to raise the local sales tax to 4½ percent. The half-cent increase will go into effect June 1.

Commissioners voted 3-2 to take advantage of the local-option sales tax approved by the General Assembly last year. Orange County becomes the 91st county in North Carolina to adopt the tax.

Commissioner Ben Lloyd's proposal reserved at least 80 percent of the revenue earned from the tax for school capital needs over the next 5½ years.

By law, at least 40 percent of the revenue earned from the tax must be used for schools. The Schools Capital Task Force previously asked that all the revenue be given to schools.

Commissioners Richard Whitted and Shirley E. Marshall voted against Lloyd's proposal. Whitted said the increase was regressive since it included an increase in taxes on food. People with lower incomes would be burdened with too much of the tax, he said.

Whitted advocated a referendum on the tax increase.

Marshall also favored such a referendum. Although a referendum would delay the increase by as much as six months, Marshall said it was more important that the public be able to decide on the issue.

Chairman Don Wilhoit spoke against the referendum, which would not be held until August. Approximately $500,000 in revenue would be lost with the delay. Wilhoit pointed out that holding a special referendum would cost the county additional money. He also said that without the sales tax increase, the county would see a 10 percent rise in property taxes. The overall cost to county residents would be lower and less regressive with the sales tax increase.

Only one out of 16 speakers at a public hearing on the tax increase March 13 was against adoption of the increase. Wilhoit said that a referendum would probably approve the sales tax increase.

An $8 million to $9 million bond issue has been advocated by the Schools Capital Task Force to further meet school capital needs.

Pollster Harris interviewed

The first of a 14-part series called "Globewatch" airs tonight at 7:30 on Channel 4, and will feature pollster Lou Harris.

Professor James Leutze will introduce Harris and a panel of questioners, which includes former Daily Tar Heel editor Kerry DeRochi and professors Nell Painter, Jurg Steiner and Charles Jenner.

Judge discusses abortion

The Supreme Court decision legalizing abortion will be discussed by the Honorable Ruth Bader Ginsburg, U.S. Circuit Judge, at 1 p.m. in the Institute of Government auditorium.

For the record

In Wednesday's story, "Historical odds against Martin in gubernatorial race are high," The Daily Tar Heel incorrectly reported that Jim Holshouser had been the first Republican elected governor of North Carolina since 1876. Holshouser actually is the second Republican, the first being D.L. Russell, who was elected in 1896. The DTH regrets the error.

King

America was without violence, and if we ever started the eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth, we would all be eyeless and toothless."

"That is why his birthday is a holiday today," Young said. "He is the only leader in our history who advocated the settlement of disputes without violence."

It was 16 years ago Wednesday that King was assassinated in Memphis, Tenn. Young, who had seen King minutes before his death, said he, King and other civil rights workers had planned to go to dinner that night. King then left the group to get his coat from his room. Upon stepping out on the balcony at the hotel, King was shot and killed.

"Martin's work led to great changes in the nation," Young said. "The Civil Rights Act was passed in 1963, ending segregation of facilities. A year later the Voting Rights Act was passed, allowing all citizens to vote. President (Lyndon) Johnson's Great Society program gave all citizens the same rights and opportunities as others and made it the government's responsibility to provide them."

King also took a stand against the Vietnam War, causing even the American liberal press to question a civil rights leader's authority to talk on war, Young said.

"Martin knew war did not solve problems," Young said. His intention was to get us out of war early, before losing 50,000 lives and the destruction of the country. He realized it was inevitable to conquer a people who had struggled for centuries against European colonial powers. That is the kind of mandate he left us."

Young said progress on racism has been made and has been noticeable in Atlanta. "Years ago when I drove to Alabama from Washington, D.C., I'd fill up my gas tank in Anderson, South Carolina," Young said. "I didn't want to stop in Georgia. It wasn't the place for a young black man to be alone. If someone then had told me I'd be mayor of Atlanta, I'd have told them they were crazy."

"Today, Atlanta has become a city too busy to hate," he said. "We've blossomed because people have worked together and progressed in the market place. You can go down Peachtree Street at noon and see whites and blacks having lunch together because they like each other."

Young said 70 percent of Atlanta's blacks are prospering and are responsible for $180 billion in income. But 30 percent have not yet reached the mainstream of the economy.

During a question and answer period, Young encouraged students to support political candidates with philosophies similar to their own and to make a difference in the political process.

Young was elected mayor of Atlanta in 1981. He also served as U.S. ambassador to the United Nations from January 1977 to September 1979.
