

Helms' Orange County chairman is Democrat

Although Sen. Jesse Helms is a strong voice within the Republican Party, one of the senator's biggest supporters in Orange County is actually a Democrat.

Lucius Cheshire, a Hillsborough attorney and a prominent Orange County Democrat, is chairman of Helms' reelection campaign in Orange County.

"There's a time in a man's life when he has to put country ahead of party," Cheshire said recently in explaining the difference between his support for Helms and his ties to the Democratic Party.

Cheshire said he mainly supported Helms because he felt the senator had the kind of moral fiber and courage that is needed to reduce the federal deficit.

Ironically, Cheshire supported Gov. Jim Hunt when Hunt first ran for Governor of North Carolina in 1976. Hunt's current attempt to win the Senate seat occupied by Helms has already attracted nationwide attention.

Politics

Cheshire, who attended law school with Hunt at UNC, said he did not support Hunt when he ran for a second term as governor because he was concerned with Hunt's policies on education. Cheshire said that under Hunt's administration, North Carolina's rank in education had dropped from 14th in the nation to 42nd.

"I don't think he (Hunt) has a track record that would recommend him for the U.S. Senate..." Cheshire said.

Despite hailing from a different political party than Helms, Cheshire said he agreed with the senator's stands on most issues.

"I begin to suspect my own judgement when I don't agree with Senator Helms," Cheshire said, adding that he felt Helms' nickname should be "Senator Know" rather than "Senator No."

While Cheshire is also supporting the campaigns of President Reagan and Democratic gubernatorial candidate D.M. "Lauch" Faircloth in 1984, he is only working actively with the Helms campaign.

The latest round of advertising warfare in the Senate race began March 27 with a Helms ad attacking Hunt's Feb. 8 fundraiser in New York City.

The new ad shows Hunt at a news conference explaining that the fund-raiser's organizers were mainly college students from North Carolina. An announcer then says that three New York Democrats — Sen. Daniel Moynihan, Gov. Mario Cuomo and New York City Mayor Edward Koch — were actually the honorary co-chairmen of the event.

Claude Allen, a spokesman for the Helms for Senate Committee, said the ad was made to cast doubt on Hunt's credibility.

"Governor Hunt made a statement, and the issue we are focusing on is his credibility," Allen said. "Out-of-state fund raising is not the issue."

But Don Hobart, a spokesman for Hunt, said recently that the ad was hypocritical since Helms raises a majority of his campaign funds outside the state.

The N.C. Democratic Party is using a summary of Helms' record on environmental issues to point out that the senator "is out of touch with reality."

In a letter to newspaper editors dated April 5, Democratic Party Research Director Ann Hubbard says the state's citizens need to know where candidates stand on the environment.

"Jesse Helms' record on environmental issues shows that he has little regard for the protection of North Carolina's abundant natural resources, the health of our citizens, or the strength of our economy," the summary said. As examples, the report said Helms was one of 13 senators to vote against the Toxic Substances Control Act and was one of only three senators to vote against the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act, which provides for the safe treatment of hazardous wastes.

Jackson group to return improperly used funds

From Associated Press reports

WASHINGTON — A social service organization with ties to presidential hopeful Jesse Jackson should return more than $700,000 to the federal government for improperly spent federal aid, the Department of Education announced Monday.

Charles Hansen, director of the management support division of the Education Department said that the money was spent without proper documentation or justification for its use. There are "some questions about keeping proper records," he said.

Push for Excellence Inc., part of the Chicago-based organization PUSH headed by Jackson, used the funds in a program designed to encourage young blacks to stay in school and prepare for job training.

While campaigning in Pittsburgh for tomorrow's Pennsylvania primary Jackson criticized the timing of the announcement and attributed the action to a bureaucratic misunderstanding. "It's really a dispute between the auditors and accountants ...," he said.

News In Brief

Deficit reductions debated

WASHINGTON — The Senate began debate Monday on a 1,334 page bill that contains hundreds of provisions for reducing the federal deficit by $63 billion over the next three years.

Even before the debate began, Senate leaders expressed hope that the bill could be finished in one week, before the week-long Easter recess that begins Friday.

Majority Leader Howard Baker, R-Tenn., would only say that the Senate would "do what we need to do" in dealing with the reduction plan. Baker and Finance Committee Chairman Robert Dole want to complete the plan as quickly as possible so that it will not be a target for lobbyists during the Easter recess.

Senate Democratic Leader Robert Byrd said that the measure is too complex for the Senate to debate for only one week.
