

Professor wins award

Dr. Angela Lumpkin, an associate professor in the Physical Education Department, was recently given the Mabel Lee Award by the American Alliance for Health, Physical Education, Recreation and Dance.

The award is presented annually to younger people for "outstanding achievement in the areas of scholarship, teaching and professional leadership," according to the group's national convention program. "Younger people" is defined by the Alliance as those under 36. Lumpkin explained there were other awards for people with more years of service.

The award presentation took place at the Alliance's national convention at Anaheim, Calif., March 30.

Lumpkin has taught at UNC for 10 years. She graduated from the University of Arkansas with a B.S. degree in 1971, and she received her M.A. in 1972 and her Ph.D. in 1974 from Ohio State.

Funds raised from the race go to Campus Y committees, such as Big Buddy, Y-Outreach, S.T.A.N.D., Walk for Hunger, etc...

Students interested in helping plan the event should come to an organizational meeting tonight at 5 in the Campus Y lounge.

Wilmington Azalea festival celebrates spring

By TOM CONLON
Staff Writer

WILMINGTON — Although the azaleas had not yet fully bloomed in this historical coastal city, the 37th annual North Carolina Azalea Festival didn't stop the town from seeking excitement and frolic.

The festival, which ran from April 5 through April 8, brought thousands of natives and visitors out to activities throughout the city. A parade, guest appearances of musical performers and television stars highlighted the event, which traditionally celebrates the coming of spring and blooming of the azaleas.

UNC basketball star Michael Jordan, returning to his hometown, crowned Queen Azalea XXXVII and participated in the parade. Clad in his Carolina blue monogram jacket, Jordan was flocked with fans before and during the parade requesting autographs and taking his picture. He also participated in the 1982 parade following UNC's national basketball championship.

"It's fun to be back — I haven't been home since Christmas," Jordan said. Asked if he was prepared to sign a lot of autographs, he said, "I've been through this all year." Following the parade, Jordan's parents were guests at the Wilmington Hilton's reception which honors guests, queens and festival committee members.

Sharon Wyatt, who plays Tiffany in General Hospital, was Queen Azalea XXXVII. The festival's events kicked off with her arrival by boat at the downtown riverfront Thursday, followed by a 21-gun salute from the permanently-docked USS North Carolina battleship.

Jordan, who attended the concert of guest celebrity Johnny Mathis, received a standing ovation before the sellout crowd at UNC-Wilmington's Track Coliseum. Jordan crowned Wyatt as Queen Azalea XXXVII amid flashing cameras at the start of the concert.

Live entertainment, a longtime part of the festival which brings celebrities to Wilmington, also included Mathis, Danny Davis and the Nashville Brass, classical pianist Royce Weyerhauser and country western couple, the Kendalls. Local artists included the Saltwater Grass bluegrass band and the Cape Fear Cloggers.

Television and film stars play a role in the Azalea festival (Ronald Reagan was such a guest in 1959). Nathan Cook of Hotel; Karin Argoud of Mama's Family; Jonathan Frakes, an actor in Bare Essence; Debralee Scott, actress in Police Academy; Ben Murphy of Lottery and John Gabriel of Ryan's Hope were among this year's guest stars.

Other special events included fireworks, a circus, tours of historic homes and gardens, museum displays and tours, sidewalk shows, softball tournaments, horse and coin shows, and films. Washington Redskins football star Mark Murphy visited Children's Day in the park at Greenfield Gardens, a dazzling park with a pond, Spanish Moss trees and red, white and pink azaleas.

Besides the traditional floats, bands and celebrities in Saturday morning's parade, several state political candidates set up booths along the parade route and flew their campaign banners over downtown by airplane during the parade.

In front of the historic city hall, Secretary of State Thad Eure, Insurance Commissioner John Ingram, Attorney General Rufus Edmisten, gubernatorial candidate

D.M. "Lauch" Faircloth and lieutenant gubernatorial candidate Bob Jordan were seated in the VIP spectator stands.

The Azalea Festival is planned and staffed entirely by about 500 volunteers and 40 committees, William Rose, 1984 Azalea Festival president, said Saturday.

"It is a year-round process to plan the festival and line up the talent, and I'm sure my predecessor will start planning for next year's festival next week," he said. "We were very pleased with the outcome of our efforts in this year's Azalea Festival."

The Azalea Festival is the result of dreams nourished by a man with love of beauty who drove around an old lake road in Wilmington one sunny afternoon in 1934. Dr. Houston Moore's dream was for the city's Greenfield Gardens to become a park filled with millions of flowers bursting into bloom in the spring and a festival filled with pageantry and color.

Moore's dream — the first festival — was fulfilled in April 1948, three months before his death. Moore served on the first festival's board of directors when plans were made for a parade, dance, community sing and flower show, highlighted by bringing a Hollywood movie star to serve as queen.

The first Azalea Festival queen, Jacqueline White, arrived in her own special Atlantic Coast Line railroad car, to be escorted during the three-day festival by Stanley Rehder who later became the 1965 festival president.

The festival grew from a local event to one attracting visitors nationwide and, in 1959, the Azalea Festival name was changed to the North Carolina Azalea Festival at Wilmington for its statewide significance.

SCAU selects officers for 1984-85 school year

By KEVIN WASHINGTON
Staff Writer

The Executive Committee of the Student Consumer Action Union recently selected the chairperson and vice chairperson for the 1984-1985 school year.

James M. Toner, a sophomore from Westmont, Ill., was appointed chairperson and Kevin M. Wolf, a junior from Flemington, N.J., was named to the vice chairperson position.

"The biggest thing I want to do this year is raise visibility on campus," Toner said. "A lot of people don't know what we do."

"I get the feeling that if more people knew about SCAU, we'd be a more vocal group."

SCAU is responsible for a number of consumer oriented projects at the University, Toner said. The organization has five divisions: Consumer Contact, Food Quality, Housing, Data and Information Student Co-operative, and Special Projects.

SCAU is most noted for the publications it circulates on campus, Toner said. The Franklin Street Gourmet, which SCAU publishes, is a comprehensive guide to restaurants in the Chapel Hill area, he said. The booklet includes information on sanitation ratings, hours, prices and reviews.

SCAU also prints the Southern Part of Heaven, which is a guide to housing in the Chapel Hill area, Toner said. The booklet provides information on apartment sizes, rents and services, he said.

Most students know about SCAU through the publications, Toner said.

Toner said that he was interested in publishing a consumer newsletter monthly. He said he would try to create a liaison service in which one person from each dorm would distribute the newsletter to dorm residents.

Wolf, as vice chairperson, is responsible for all of the SCAU publications. He said there were two new publication projects in the works.

"We're interested in putting together an undergraduate review of courses," Wolf said. "It hasn't taken shape, but it will be something like the Harvard course review — an older students guide for younger students."

Wolf said SCAU would also attempt to take over the publication of the Phi Eta Sigma course review, which is written by professors.

Ruthie Pipkin, a sophomore from Charlotte, and Erika Bailey, a junior from Raleigh, are also new additions to the SCAU Executive Committee, Toner said.

Pipkin is in charge of public service announcements as the new director of Consumer Contact, Toner said. Bailey, who is the new director of D.I.S.C., will be in charge of the computer which CGC funded last year for use by recognized campus organizations under SCAU, he said.

SCAU still needs to fill the positions of secretary and treasurer, Toner said.

The organization has recently advertised for people to fill the editor positions of SCAU's publications, Toner said. "Editors should have good organizational skills because they will need to collate enormous amounts of information into a book," he said.

This chart is a comparative ranking of prices for toiletries, medicinals, and school supplies. The Student Consumer Action Union checks prices on 60 sample items in three different categories and compares the averages to determine this information.

NA* represents a ranking that is not applicable, such as Chapel Hill Stationers that does not carry toiletries or medicinals. Also, Kerr Drugs does carry medicinals and school supplies and Village Pharmacy does carry school supplies but were not priced this week.

This chart is a bi-weekly, comparative ranking of food prices at local grocery stores compiled by the Student Consumer Action Union. SCAU checks prices on forty-three sample items in five different categories and compares the averages to determine this information.

To read this chart, cross index the store name with a food category column; the printed number indicates the store's rank from lowest to highest in price during the week's survey period. For example, Fowler's has the highest price for dairy products, but has the lowest for produce.
