The academic year 1983-84 was one filled with campus controversy in which most students were involved at some point. A 35-minute late financial statement from DTH editor candidate Jeff Hiday caused campus elections to continue until Feb. 28. Thanks to this conflict, however, for the impending re-evaluation of the student government election laws.

Campus organizations found fewer funds to be allocated during this year's Campus Governing Council budget hearings. Many groups faced severe cuts in their funding for the 84-85 academic year. Group projects had to be cut in order for most organizations to receive any funding at all.

The opening of Davis Library caused sparks to fly when a student submitted a sarcastic letter to the editor urging undergraduate students be removed from the building.

Also during the year, students witnessed the removal of a controversial mikeman, the crowning of a male homecoming queen, the founding of Students Effectively Establishing a Democratic System and Student Television, and the rejection of assistant Political Science Professor David Garrow's last appeal to remain at UNC.
