PHILADELPHIA—Two brothers who escaped with four other convicted murderers last month from a Virginia prison in the largest death row breakout in U.S. history were recaptured here Tuesday night, the FBI said.

James and Linwood Briley, who were convicted of nine murders, were caught in an operation directed by FBI agents, police said. The Brileys were the last fugitives of the May 31 escape to be apprehended.

The brothers were "completely surprised" when they were apprehended at 9:51 p.m. outside a public parking garage, said FBI special agent John L. Hogan.

"We have information that they were here and from the two guys who were apprehended in New England, we realized they had been through here," Hogan said. FBI agents believe that the Brileys had been in the area since June 1, Hogan said.

He said information was developed about the brothers' relatives in the area through prison records. An uncle, Johnnie Council, 45, of Philadelphia, will be charged with harboring criminals, Hogan said.

RALEIGH—Gov. Jim Hunt is praising a legislative committee's $590 million spending plan for 1984-85 that contains a pay raise for teachers and state employees but says he'll keep working for a better pay increase for school superintendents.

The joint House-Senate Appropriations Committee approved $590 million in additions to the 1984-85 budget Tuesday. They included a 10 percent pay raise for state employees, a 15 percent raise for teachers and principals and money to reduce the size of classes in grades four through six.

But the committee trimmed the raise for school superintendents and school central office personnel from 15 percent to 10 percent to save $5 million.

"Overall the Appropriations Committee approved the vast majority of my education package and I am very grateful for their action to help us take a giant step forward in the public schools of North Carolina," Hunt said in a prepared statement.

"My full proposal on reduction of class size in grades four through six is included in the budget at this point, as is a full 15 percent salary increase for teachers and principals. I will continue to work to see that superintendents and central office personnel are included in that 15 percent pay raise," he said.

Hunt said some of the small items eliminated from the budget might be phased in using other funds, and he said the state Board of Education will be looking at that.

WASHINGTON—The Senate, entering the final round of a grueling and bitter fight over a $291 billion defense budget, debated Tuesday whether to permanently limit U.S. troop strength in Europe—and ship many Americans out if the NATO allies don't shape up.

Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., pressed for an amendment to withdraw up to 90,000 U.S. troops—nearly one-third—from the continent by 1990 unless other members of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization fulfill longstanding pledges to bolster their own forces.

Without such cooperation, he said, there is no point in the United States continuing to spend additional billions on a conventional deterrence that is "nothing more than a nuclear trip-wire."

Despite its own consternation over repeated European failure to meet NATO strength targets, the Reagan administration strongly opposed what one White House official called Nunn's "sledgehammer approach to dealing with our allies."

The official, who spoke on condition he not be identified, quoted Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger as telling Republican leaders at the White House that the proposal would "do something the Soviets haven't been able to do for three years"—divide the alliance.

But Nunn, by far the Senate's most influential Democrat on defense issues, refused to be dissuaded. "I don't want to reduce our forces in NATO," he said. "But it's time for the allies to put up or shut up," after years of cajoling on the diplomatic front.

Republican leaders clearly were worried about Nunn's chances, though the Georgian declined to predict victory the first time around. "I'll eventually get the votes," he said.

WASHINGTON—At a hearing filled with all the anger of a barroom brawl, the Senate was urged Tuesday to approve raising the legal drinking age to 21 and wiping out "blood borders" between states.

The drinking age bill, which cleared the House overwhelmingly on June 7, was opposed by student groups and owners of taverns and restaurants who said that if teenagers want to drink, they will find a way.

The two sides waged an emotional battle with statistical weapons as they sat before a map with "blood borders" outlined in red, showing state boundaries that teen-agers drive across to obtain liquor they are too young to buy legally at home.

Representatives of parents' groups, safety organizations and the Reagan administration told a Senate Labor and Human Resources subcommittee that much of the nation's highway carnage is caused by teen-agers who drive into states with a lower drinking age.

"I'm tired of the argument that 'if you're old enough to fight you're old enough to drink,'" said Candy Lightner, president of Mothers Against Drunk Driving, whose voice rose with each sentence.

"You are old enough to fight at 17, but I don't see any movement to lower the drinking age to 17," she said.

Michael M. Birkley, executive director of the Tavern League of Wisconsin, was no less emotional.

"In addition to our commercial interest, we have children too," he said. "We care more about our children than our cash registers."

LOS ANGELES—A couple who died after placing two frozen embryos in an Australian clinic had an estate of perhaps $1 million and left an heir who was very surprised that the couple had taken part in a "test tube baby" program, a lawyer says.

Laura Horwitch, attorney for Michael Rios, said reports in Australia that Mario and Elsa Rios, both of Los Angeles, had been worth $7 million were "grossly exaggerated."

"All together, they probably left about $1 million, of which Michael Rios is the executor and sole heir," Horwitch said.

Michael Rios is Mario Rios' son. His age and place of residence were not immediately available.

The attorney said the couple, who died in a plane crash in their native Chile last year, left no wills.

The deaths of the couple have raised questions about what to do with their two "orphaned" embryos.

SALT LAKE CITY—The U.S. Food and Drug Administration approved a second implant of the Utah artificial heart Tuesday, and the doctor who performed the first operations said his surgical team is "ready right now" for another one.

The FDA's approval followed months of bureaucratic review which left doctors at the University of Utah Medical Center angry and frustrated. But Tuesday they were granted what they sought, permission to use the fist-sized, portable heart-drive unit on another patient.

"We are now in the process of finding a patient for the next clinical implantation of the artificial heart," Dr. William C. DeVries told a news conference.

Barney Clark, a dentist from the Seattle area, was the first to receive the artificial heart when on Dec. 2, 1982, DeVries led a team of surgeons in implanting the polyurethane device. Clark survived for 112 days.

During and after Clark's experience on the heart, scientists and medical researchers criticized use of the device on a human, questioning its efficacy and long-term future.

"We are ready right now, at this moment," DeVries said. However, he said he did not yet have a candidate for the second implant, although hundreds have inquired about the procedure.

"Until the approval came from the Food and Drug Administration, we did not feel it was morally or ethically right to begin a list," he said, but added one would be started immediately.
