

Reagan claims 'no plan' for tax increase

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Reagan said Tuesday he has "no plan" to call for a tax increase next year despite Democratic rival Walter F. Mondale's assertion that one is inevitable no matter who wins the election.

Reagan said Mondale has "repeatedly and over the years" called for tax increases as a budget cure-all.

Replying to the Democrat's charge that he has a "secret plan" to raise taxes after the election, Reagan told a televised news conference that "I have no plan for a tax increase. I believe it would be counterproductive" for the economic recovery.

As for Democratic charges that his program was designed for the wealthy, Reagan declared "There is no basis for this demagoguery that we are trying to base or get our recovery on the backs of the needy."

Reagan also said Democratic opposition to his policy in Central America amounted to "letting El Salvador slowly bleed to death." If that happens, he said, "they'll be able to point a finger and say, 'Your program didn't work.'"

In the opening moments of the news conference, Reagan thus highlighted differences between himself and Mondale on two key points.

"Everything we've said about the Sandinistas in Nicaragua is a proven fact," Reagan said. "They are trying to destroy El Salvador by providing the rebels there with a wherewithal to do it. They are a totalitarian government."

The administration is currently aiding anti-Sandinista forces, but Congress has balked at Reagan's latest request for $21 million in additional military aid.

Reagan opened his 26th televised presidential news conference — and his first since Mondale won the Democratic nomination at last week's national convention, with a call to the election year Congress to approve several bills, including a so-called balanced budget amendment to the Constitution. The measure actually would not require balanced spending, but would make red-ink appropriations more difficult procedurally.

"It's time to test the 'new realism,' and see if the Democratic leadership will move from words to real action," Reagan said, in a sarcastic reference to Mondale's pledge of a "new realism" on the part of the Democrats in the fall campaign.

In addition to the balanced-budget amendment, Reagan reinstated his call for tax breaks to parents of lower and middle income private school students; increased retirement benefits for housewives; tax breaks to encourage inner-city business investments; anti-crime legislation and an "equal access" bill permitting religious student groups to meet after hours in schools.

The president said he was "standing by the appointment" of former Environmental Protection Agency chief Anne M. Burford to a government advisory panel, despite a 74-19 vote by the Senate earlier in the day demanding that he withdraw her name.

Ms. Burford resigned last year from her ERA post under a cloud of mismanagement charges, but Reagan said, "There was not a single allegation that was proved in any way."

Reagan also was non-committal on whether he would lift economic sanctions against Poland. "We are studying what they have done," he said of the Polish government's declaration of amnesty last weekend for more than 600 political prisoners.

Nicholson said.

The Council also decided it was an opportunity to show opposition to the new federal law requiring states to raise the drinking age to 21 by 1987 or lose highway funds.

If the N.C. General Assembly sees students as a voting force, the legislators may consider not adopting the 21-year-old drinking age, Berger said.

The Council also voted to not buy Coors products for the party because some of the Council members said the company had discriminatory practices.

Dawn Peters, Summer CGC speaker pro tem, questioned the advisability of serving beer, however.

"A lot of people in my area (District 9) are under 19," she said, "and there are a lot of headaches with serving beer."

Council member Max Lloyd said, "Very, very few people are

18," because most are returning students rather than freshmen.

Boulton said in an interview Tuesday night that he was not opposed to the idea of a party but that buying beer may not be possible.

The Safe Roads Act that took effect last Oct. 1 has a lot of rules about liability that have not been tested in the courts yet, he said.

"We've got to be guided by the interpretation (of the law) people have given us," he said, referring to the meeting with the ABC Board.

In reports to the council, Closs announced that a new legislative secretary has been hired, and Parker announced that Student Savings Cards have arrived, that the Student Code has been put on computer at the Student Union and that there are about 150 hardship parking permits available for the fall.
