

Mondale proposes $85 B in higher taxes

The Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA In a major campaign gamble, Walter F. Mondale proposed $85 billion higher taxes yesterday as part of a $177 billion deficit-reduction plan, and challenged President Reagan to "stop avoiding the deficit issue."

"You can't hide your red ink with any more blue smoke and mirrors," the Democratic presidential candidate said as he unveiled a plan that also proclaimed a "pay as you go" policy for new spending or future programs.

The deficit would fall from a projected $263 billion to $86 billion by the end of the 1989 fiscal year under the plan.

He said his blueprint would have an "excellent chance of gaining support of the Congress."

"Mr. Reagan, all my cards are on the table face up. Americans are now calling your hand," Mondale said at a news conference that the campaign made available to television and radio stations around the country via satellite.

Reagan, asked for his reaction during a photo session, said the Mondale plan was "nothing new."

Asked if he would present his own deficit-control plan, Reagan said, "I think I've said it more specifically than most other administrations in all the times we've been trying to do since 1981."

Mondale's plan calls for $85 billion in higher taxes, much of it collected from wealthy individuals and corporations, but the money would be set aside in a special fund to reduce the deficit, "not for increased spending or new programs."

The plan includes a net of $24 billion in spending cuts — $54 billion in cuts partially offset by $30 billion in restoration of some of Reagan's budget reductions.

The cuts include $25 billion from Reagan's defense buildup; $12 billion from a plan to hold down health care increases; and $4 billion from farm programs.

The $30 billion in add-ons would go for programs such as education, the environment and school lunches.

The balance of the deficit plan envisions savings of $51 billion in lower interest costs on the national debt, the result of a presumed decrease in interest rates, and another $17 billion resulting from a healthier economy.

Interest rates are projected to fall from 10 percent on the 91-day treasury bill to 8.5 percent in 1989.

In all, Mondale's plan would trim $177 billion from what the Congressional Budget Office estimates would otherwise be a deficit of $263 billion.

The Reagan administration says the actual deficit would be much lower, and Reagan himself gave his answer to Mondale's call for higher taxes even before the details of the plan were unveiled.

"Raising taxes is an old answer," the president said at a campaign appearance on Sunday in Doylestown, Pa., about 25 miles north of where Mondale spoke.

For the record

An anonymous baseball player quoted in Thursday's Daily Tar Heel ("Swofford says drug tests may help problem users") was talking in general terms only about drug use on campus — both in and out of athletics — and not about his own drug use. Also, in quoting a baseball player, the DTH did not mean to imply that there is a drug problem on the baseball team.

In the story "Mainstreaming salad," (Daily Tar Heel, Sept. 7), the price for Sonny's "Real Pit" Bar-B-Que salad bar was incorrectly given. The real price is $3.59. The DTH regrets the error.

Convicted murderer congratulates police, dies

The Associated Press

ANGOLA, La. Bitter and sarcastic to the end, Timothy Baldwin went to this death in the Louisiana electric chair yesterday, insisting he was innocent of beating an 85-year-old blind woman to death with a TV set and congratulating police and prosecutors who "tried so hard to murder me."

Baldwin was the fourth person executed in Louisiana and the 24th in the United States since the Supreme Court reinstated the death penalty in 1976.

The final statement from Baldwin, an articulate, college-educated man with an IQ said to be 147, was full of acid sarcasm aimed at prosecutor Johnny Carl Parkerson, who refused last week to release investigative records of the case for a final appeal. "That wasn't a very smart move," Baldwin said. "They as good as admitted I was innocent."

Radioactive cargo may be loose

OSTEND, Belgium — The French freighter Mont Louis, which went down with its radioactive cargo off the Belgian coast, broke in two in a storm yesterday, the Belgian news agency Belga reported.

The news agency quoted the Ministry of Environment as saying none of the ship's 30 containers with uranium hexafluoride had been retrieved from the wreckage before the ship began breaking up.

Salvage crews on the scene since the Mont Louis collided with a ferry and sank Aug. 25 on a sand bank 12 miles off the Belgian coast have been prevented by bad weather from removing the containers holding the radioactive cargo.

Officials have said there has been no leak of radioactivity.

Gale force winds and 12-foot waves earlier Monday ripped open one of the ship's fuel tanks and sent a two-mile-long oil slick drifting toward Belgian beaches.

Jim and Jesse hit the road

Fresh from their second televised debate, Sen. Jesse Helms and Gov. Jim Hunt hit the campaign trail again yesterday — Helms accompanying Vice President George Bush on a Piedmont swing, and Hunt blasting Republicans in Gastonia.

Both Helms and Hunt said they were pleased with their performances on Sunday night's faceoff in Wilmington. They're scheduled to debate twice more in their hard-fought U.S. Senate campaign.

"I wanted to establish who Jim Hunt is . . . and talk about the kind of senator I would be," said Hunt. "I think that came through time and time again."

Helms refused to compare Sunday's debate with their first confrontation on July 29 but repeated his complaints about having a moderator.

"I had hoped the governor and I could sit down . . . man to man and discuss the issues without this kind of dog and pony show," Helms said. "The foremost issue in this campaign is credibility."
