

Interstate banking holds consumer options

By VANCE TREFETHEN
Business Editor

Interstate banking in the Southeast could mean more choices for North Carolina bank customers and more capital for businesses and jobs in the state, but some pending court cases have cast a shadow over the region's attempts at interstate banking.

Interstate banking, which would allow out-of-state banks to operate in North Carolina and N.C. banks to do business in other states, became a possibility in this state over the summer when the N.C. General Assembly passed an interstate banking law in July.

"The new law allows North Carolina banks to acquire or merge with banks in 12 other states and the District of Columbia, provided those states and the District have passed similar, reciprocal legislation," said T.B. Sumner, chairman of First Union Corp. in a prepared statement. So far, three other Southeastern states — South Carolina, Georgia, and Florida — have reciprocal laws.

Traditionally, most banks have been restricted by law to accept deposits only in the state in which they were chartered. Recently, several New England states set up a regional interstate banking system, but that system has been challenged in court, and the outcome of that decision could have a strong impact on banking in the Southeast.

The ruling would have an effect on interstate banking in the Southeast, said James Singleton, media relations manager for First Union National Bank in Charlotte. "The industry is waiting on the effects of that suit. Until Congress acts or the Supreme Court decides the suit, regional interstate banking is something that will hang for a while."

But if regional interstate banking does go into effect in the Southeast, North Carolina stands to benefit, both in its banking system and in the general economy.

"Right now, North Carolina has a very strong position in banking in the Southeast," said Al Fuqua, executive vice president of the N.C. Bankers Association.

As interstate banking takes hold, North Carolina banks should experience a growth in their available capital, and that will lead to more money for businesses and more new jobs in the state, Fuqua said.

For the average customer, the changes will only be minor. "I don't think the average customer is going to see any difference in North Carolina," said Fuqua. The most important change will be simply a growth in the number of banks that are available to serve customers, including banks from large southeastern cities like Atlanta and Miami, Fuqua said.

Senior citizens for Helms

By Associated Press Reports

A senior citizens group which says it has 46,000 members in North Carolina endorsed Sen. Jesse Helms' re-election Wednesday, while his opponent, Gov. Jim Hunt, won the backing of a solar energy lobbying organization.

Helms, whom Hunt has attacked repeatedly as a foe of Social Security, Medicare and other programs for the elderly, announced through a campaign aide that he had the support of the National Alliance of Senior Citizens.

The Alliance, based in Arlington, Va., near Washington, numbers 1.4 million nationally and typically backs conservative, said national director Curt Clinkscales III.

News in Brief

Mistrial announced in CP&L case

RALEIGH — A mistrial was declared after a jury deadlocked in the case of a disabled man who sued Carolina Power & Light Co. for $5 million for injuries he sustained in an electrical shock.

Wake County Superior Court Judge Edwin Preston Jr. declared the mistrial Tuesday in the case of Daniel Miller of New Jersey after jurors had deliberated for 15 hours since Friday.

Local death called suicide

The body of Herbert Mann Jones, 33, of 256 Union Grove Church Road, was found by his brother after failing to answer the door when a colleague arrived to pick him up for work, said J.T. Horton, a detective for the Orange County Sheriff's Department.

No note was found at the scene to indicate a reason for the suicide.

Jones was arrested at 1:05 a.m. Monday following the assault on West Franklin St. Four students heard the victim screaming, chased Jones and held him until police arrived, said Chapel Hill Police Chief Herman Stone.

Jones was released later that day on a $250 secured bond.

Det. Horton said Jones had recently served 17 years in prison on charges of first-degree burglary and assault.

"We were trying Monday to get his parole revoked after the assault charge," Stone said.

Be Whole speaks in the Pit today

Russell McCraw, director of the Be Whole outreach, will speak at noon today in the pit about his transition from a homosexual to heterosexual lifestyle.

McCraw's ministry teaches an alternative to the homosexual life through a relationship with Jesus Christ.

"We're not interested in changing anyone from homosexuality to heterosexuality without seeing an orientation toward Christ being the center of that change," McCraw said. "We only seek to offer change to those who want change."

After being active in the gay lifestyle for 10 years and experiencing homosexual tendencies since puberty, McCraw established his ministry six years ago. "It's nothing more than a byproduct of the changes in my life," he said.

UNC marks the first of 100 colleges McCraw hopes to visit in the next two years. He plans to establish a follow-up ministry for students seeking change and will return to campus in the spring.

"There are somewhere close to 20 million people in North America struggling with this, and that's a conservative estimate," McCraw said. "We're not dangling a carrot out to people as some kind of a false hope. We believe if Christ can not change someone from his homosexual desires and feelings, he can not change anything."
