

Carlton warns of right wing takeover in N.C.

By TIM BROWN
Staff Writer

A quiet and methodical conspiracy to gain political control in North Carolina has been in operation for the past couple of years under the leadership of Republican Sen. Jesse Helms, said former State Supreme Court Judge Phil Carlton Wednesday night.

Carlton, who now serves as special legal counsel to the campaign of Gov. Jim Hunt told a meeting of Carolina Students for Hunt that several right-wing factions have politically aligned themselves to form what he calls the Right-Wing Combine. If successful, the combine could achieve a political coup in North Carolina which would leave political power in the hands of an elite few, he said.

"The people of North Carolina need to know that the most extremist amalgamation of right-wing political engineers in recent history fully intend to make North Carolina home base on a playing field designed to eliminate every player except those willing to be assigned to the right field," Carlton said.

While there are several components to the right-wing combine, Carlton said that there are two main groups to be aware of. The first is the Jesse Helms political machine which Carlton said could be the strongest of its kind in recent history. Within the Helms political machine is the National Congressional Club and its offshoots such as Jefferson Marketing, Inc., which Carlton suggested has allowed the Helms campaign to evade federal election laws.

The second component is the New Religious Right, which Carlton described as a "group of ultra-conservative Christians who have organized for the purpose of joining hands with the political right in order to promote ideological conservatism about a few carefully selected issues which they perceive to be the agenda for the nation in 1984."

He warned the group of nearly 40 students at the meeting that diversity within the combine is cause for concern because each component has its own goals, purposes and demands. "Their demands will clash and Jesse Helms and his handful of advisors will call it to suit their political interests," he said.

What is it that joins these various factions into one common cause?

Carlton said that the groups are bound together by the emotional issues which have been selected by the combine to be the agenda - abortion, women's rights and school prayer. By narrowing the agenda to these issues, the combine is able to avoid education, the environment and the elderly, he said.

"You will not hear Sen. Helms offer a program on these broad and butter issues which affect us all, because the Right-Wing Combine has agreed to ignore them and focus solely on their narrow agenda, Carlton said.

While the narrow agenda prescribed by the combine is a major concern, he warned that combine leaders - white, male, prosperous and nationalistic - are equally intolerant of dissent. "The clear danger is that so many people fall into so many of those categories," he said. "It becomes easy to sympathize with the message because their message is a congenial one to many and says what many want to hear."

Oct. 26 debate scheduled

From Associated Press Reports

RALEIGH — State Sen. Bob Jordan, D-Montgomery, and John Carrington of Raleigh, the candidates for lieutenant governor, will debate on statewide television Oct. 26.

Jordan said yesterday that the debate would take place in Raleigh and be broadcast by the UNC Center for Public Television. A Carrington spokesman confirmed the plan and said the debate would last a half-hour.

"We're looking forward to it," said Jordan. "Normally, with a lead as big as I have, you'd tend to stay away from something like this. But we have reason to believe that our campaign would benefit from the public seeing the two of us together."

Jordan said he hoped the debate would help focus public attention on the lieutenant governor's race, which has been overshadowed by the campaigns for president, U.S. Senate and governor.

He said he hadn't planned debate strategy in detail, but would focus on his 27 years of public service and his opponent's inexperience. Carrington, a Raleigh businessman, has not sought public office before.

Jim Gocke, spokesman for Carrington, said the Republican hoped to gain exposure by appearing with Jordan.

"I don't know that there are any big points to make or issues to come out of debates," said Gocke. "Basically, there are fundamentally different political philosophies between the two candidates. But a Republican has a difficult time getting free exposure and that's the number one thing."

Carrington has made few public appearances and is relying heavily on television advertisements and billboards.

Jordan, who said he would begin airing his own commercials soon, has accused Carrington of trying to spend his way into office without addressing the issues.

News in Brief

Fire destroys state forms

RALEIGH — A fire that gutted a downtown state government building, injuring two firefighters and forcing the evacuation of hundreds of state workers, also destroyed some welfare forms, officials said yesterday.

"We had been storing food stamp forms, energy assistance forms and so forth in the building," said Bryant Haskins, a spokesman for the State Human Resources Department. "We won't know until later this afternoon how many were destroyed, but we don't think it will slow us down too much."

Also lost were files for the department's "Care-Line," a toll-free telephone line offering answers to questions about assistance programs, Haskins said.

"All the computer terminals burned and we lost a lot of Rolodex information," he said. "We lost all our files and records of calls going back several years. It's unfortunate because it was to be moved next Thursday."

Raleigh Assistant Fire Chief R.B. King said one firefighter was taken to a hospital for a leg injury and another for smoke inhalation after Wednesday's fire in the Howard Building.

The cause of the fire and damage estimates had not been determined.

The Howard Building adjoins the state printing shop and is adjacent to the 11-story Albermarle Building, whose estimated 600 employees also were evacuated, Capitol Police Chief Herbert Gay said.

A two-foot concrete fire wall separates the printing office and the Howard Building, which was being used for temporary office space by the state, said Jane S. Patterson, state administration secretary.

Education

Brown says the quality of UNC's future teachers hinges on the quality of the UNC faculty. "Our strength is in the University itself," he said. "Out of 120 hours, our students take about 100 hours in the College of Arts and Sciences. If we have good arts and sciences departments, we will have well-trained teachers."

Student-teachers are evaluated by their supervising instructors from UNC and by the classroom teacher whose class they teach. The Chapel Hill-Carrboro school system will work with 55 student-teachers from UNC this year.

One of them, Cynthia Dellastatious, a senior from Winston-Salem, says the classroom teacher she is working with, Miles Reck, has helped her greatly. She has observed Reck's third-grade classroom at Carrboro Elementary School two days a week, and on Oct. 17 will teach the class herself for 10 weeks, with Reck as an observer.

Once the student-teaching is completed, the graduates still must be certified. They must pass a number of evaluations by the School of Education and make an acceptable score on the National Teacher's Examination. If the State Department of Public Instruction accepts their qualifications, they receive a certificate which enables them to teach for five years. Burke says the length of the probationary certificate will change to two years after 1985.

NCAE President Banks says the 10-12 week student-teaching period is not long enough. "We (the NCAE) support a full-year internship after graduation, maybe at half-salary, to make the internship intensive enough so it's meaningful."

Richard Brice, professor of education, said the training of teachers is at best a difficult task, and contrasted it with the six- to eight-week training of graduates who join corporations. "They (corporations) don't expect them to produce right away," he said. "But teachers are plopped right down in the classroom. If we can't train business people on campus, how can we train teachers, who have more complex responsibilities?"

Ferrell, who said she planned to return to the classroom after completing a master's in education, described what the student-teachers she trains experience:

"They're going to learn a whole lot, an awful lot they can't learn in any other manner. They'll learn about discipline, and what works and what doesn't work. They'll be out there in their own rooms ... They'll learn the rest of their lives."

Get a redneck; win a contest

The UNC Marching Tar Heels are sponsoring the "Beat State Biggest Redneck Contest" to be held the week of the Oct. 20 State football game. Any group may sponsor a "redneck" contestant for $5 and entry forms may be picked up at the band office in the basement of the Student Union or at the Union desk. Applications must be returned to the band office by 5 p.m., Oct. 11. From 4-5 p.m. that day a photo session will be held for all contestants.

Students will vote for the "biggest redneck" in the Pit Oct. 17-19. The winner, who will receive $50, will be announced at halftime. Proceeds from the contest will be donated to the Chapel Hill Ronald McDonald House.
