

Phone books out in Nov.

From staff reports
The 1984-85 University phone directories are now being printed and should be delivered in early November, according to Nellie Baber, campus directory coordinator.

"They're scheduled to be delivered the first week in November," she said, adding she thought this year's distribution would be a week earlier than when the books came out last year.

Alice Wilkerson of the University Registrar's office said there should not be any problems with students' listings this year. Last year a number of students, especially from Granville Towers, complained of incorrect listings.

"We hope we've got that one cleared up," she said.

Wilkerson said the registrar's office got students' local addresses from the cards they turned in when they preregistered for the fall, and from address correction forms.

The cutoff date for getting a correct listing in this year's directory was Sept. 14, Wilkerson said.

"Anything after that would not be in the directory," she said, although it would be on microfiche with the Student Locator Service.

Older women course offered

Students will have the chance to explore financial and emotional issues affecting mid-life women in Nursing 176, Women Over 50 in Contemporary Society, this spring semester.

The course will be taught by Dr. Betty Landsberger, associate professor in the School of Nursing.

The emphasis will not be just about problems older women face, Landsberger said, but also on the positive aspects of their lives and their role in society. These women have great potential to contribute through both paid and volunteer activities in business, politics, religion and local organizations, she said.

Campus Briefs

Classes will meet Wednesdays from 6:30-9 p.m. in 450 Carrington Hall.

For more information, contact Landsberger at 966-5430.

Crawford dead at 62

James Crawford, former chairman of the department of physics and astronomy, died Sunday at his home.

Crawford, 62, of 311 Wesley Dr. was department chairman for 10 years. He was director of the University's new curriculum of applied science when he died.

"Jim Crawford shaped the department of physics and astronomy for 10 years," said University Provost Samuel Williamson. "But he also touched many beyond his department and his efforts to create the curriculum in applied science will be among his many legacies."

Crawford's funeral was 3 p.m. Monday at University United Methodist Church where he was chairman of the Administrative Board.

Memorial gifts may be made to the church or to the Intersarsity Christian Fellowship.

Debate team takes fourth

This past weekend, the UNC Individual Events Speech Team traveled to George Mason University, Fairfax, Va., for their first tournament of the season. Defeating several schools, the UNC team won fourth place sweepstakes award.

Individuals on the team winning top honors were sophomore Sibby Anderson, who placed fifth in the prose competition and freshman Monty Hagler, who took fourth place in impromptu speaking.

Campus Y committee plans guide to UNC life

By LISA SWICEGOOD
Staff Writer

The Student Affairs Committee of the Campus Y is planning an "Insider's Guide to Carolina," a booklet designed to capture the flavor and character of the University as seen by its students, faculty and staff.

Arri Eisen, co-chairman of the committee, said although there were numerous academic manuals on campus, none had objectively shown the real Carolina. "It's not really an original idea," Eisen said. "Harvard and campuses in England do it. It's just something that hasn't been done here."

Committee co-chairman Frans Tax said the group was looking for articles about personal experiences at UNC. "We want anything from registration in Woolen Gym and dorm life, to Franklin Street and Troll's."

Tentative categories include academics, social activities, sports and student activism, Eisen said.

Tax said they would like the articles to be humorous and satirical. "We like things that are funny, but yet on the positive side," he said.

In addition to articles, the booklet will also feature essays, cartoons, photographs, drawings and poems.

"We desperately need people from the University to submit articles to make it part of the University," Tax said. "We don't want to decide in advance what people think. It will be Carolina describing Carolina."

The booklet will be aimed mainly at freshmen but will also be helpful for graduate students and junior transfers.

Eisen said the UNC administration had been very supportive of the project. "We've gotten great support everywhere we went. It's just a matter of getting it out," he said.

Donald Boulton, vice chancellor and dean of student affairs, allotted $100 from a special alumni fund to the booklet after it was discussed with him.

Boulton said the fund, set up by UNC alumni, contained about $2,000 to be distributed to help certain student groups with new ideas get them started. "It's not much, but it helps students with new ideas out," he said.

Boulton said he felt that the booklet, if done well, would benefit the University. "I think the idea sounds good, but it's going to require an awful lot of work," he said.

"There's nothing quite like a student approach," he said, adding that the booklet would need to be both educational and readable.

"It will be a good way to sell the University — from the ones that sell it best — students," he said.

The undergraduate admissions department also has expressed interest in the booklet. According to Eisen, the admissions office is considering giving the booklet to people visiting the campus as well as including it in freshmen orientation.

"We would like to advertise the booklet to freshmen before they come to Carolina," Tax said.

Eisen said money would not be a problem in publishing the booklet. Although initial publicity money will come from the Campus Y, he said the committee hoped the University would help with the funding. "We've had a positive feeling from all around. If the booklet is good, money will be no problem," Eisen said.

"We may have to charge $4 or $5 for the booklet to get it going," he said. "But later we'd like to make it free."

Tax added, "We're going to make the booklet as cheap as possible."

Eisen said they hoped to have the first draft finished by April. "We're aiming for it to be available for incoming freshmen," he said.

The committee hopes the project will become an annual or biannual publication, Eisen said, explaining that would be necessary to keep the booklet up-to-date and topical.

Tax said they were considering a contest for freshmen English classes to submit an essay on "My first impression of Carolina." The winning essay would be included in the booklet and would win a $50 prize.

Anyone interested in writing for the booklet or serving on the committee can fill out an application at the Campus Y.

CGC extends deadline for financial statements

By DAVID SCHMIDT
Staff Writer

The Campus Governing Council, in a brief meeting last night, extended by a day the time candidates in campus elections have to turn in financial statements.

Before an hour passed, the CGC passed the bill to amend what CGC Speaker Reggie Holley called a ridiculous and inconsistent elections law.

Previously, the rule required that all campaign spending reports be submitted to the Elections Board by 5 p.m. on the day of the election. Daily Tar Heel Editor Jeff Hiday was disqualified by the board after February's election for missing the deadline, but the Student Supreme Court overturned the disqualification and ordered another election for DTH editor.

"We are almost putting too much emphasis on the financial statements themselves," Holley (Dist. 11) said. "They're insignificant. Nobody looks at them except the newspapers."

The Elections Board does analyze them to check if candidates spend more than they are permitted, he added, "but if you do go over you're only going to be fined."

The extension helps to ensure accuracy in the statements, Holley said. Since polls don't close until 7 p.m., a statement turned in at 5 p.m. wouldn't include the possible costs of two more hours spent campaigning.

In addition, many write-in candidates aren't aware of the financial statement requirement, Holley said, and the new law would give them a chance to file one before disqualification. He also said setting the deadline after the election conformed to North Carolina state elections laws.

Elections Board Chairman Edwin Fountain said he saw no problems with the change.

An additional elections law passed by the CGC moves campuswide elections from the second week in February to the first week. The Rules and Judiciary Committee meeting today will include discussion on whether to move them even further ahead to November next year.

Student Body President Paul Parker

said he fully supported starting future terms earlier in the spring semester. "I will gladly give up a week of my term if it gives a stronger year for whoever is coming in," he said.

Concerning national elections, the CGC passed a resolution addressed to department heads that suggests no exams or quizzes be given on Nov. 6 so that students can leave town to vote.

In other action, the CGC approved the appointment of Gay Todd to the Audit Board, which oversees the Student Activities Fund Office and helps with accounting problems it might have.

Once you've tasted Killian's Irish Red,
Canadian beer borders on the ordinary.

Now don't get us wrong. The Canadians make some pretty fine beers. But none of them slow-roast their malt like we do. So no Canadian beer has the color, the character, the rich, incredibly smooth taste of Killian's Red Ale. So the next time you're about to order your favorite Canadian beer, try a Killian's Red, instead. And try something that borders on the magnificent.
