Alpha-Phi Omega is cleaning out last semester's lost and found items. Come to the office in the basement of the Union to claim your lost items before Jan. 18.

WXYC needs disc jockeys

WXYC will be interviewing prospective new disc jockeys through Jan. 18. No radio experience is necessary, but familiarity with contemporary music is required. Interested UNC students can contact Station Manager Bill Burton in room 234 of the Student Union for a personal interview.

Hardship permit deadline is today

Hardship parking permits, available in Suite C of the Student Union, must be turned in by 3 p.m. today.

About 20 permits are available for the spring semester. Student Body President Paul Parker stressed that a good reason for requesting the permit was necessary to be considered.

Names of students to receive the permits will be posted outside Suite C tomorrow. Students may then obtain their permits from the traffic office.

Man charged with cadaver embezzling from Med School

By MIKE GUNZENHAUSER

Lester Sandlin will be arraigned Monday on charges that he embezzled 25 cadavers from the UNC medical school.

An Orange County grand jury indicted Sandlin Dec. 10 on 50 counts, including 25 charges of embezzling cadavers. Sandlin lost his job as curator in August after he was indicted for embezzling 11 cadavers.

Sandlin's attorney, Ann Loflin, said yesterday she will enter a plea Monday. All pre-arraignment notices will be filed by then, she said.

Sandlin was treated for a pancreas disorder at a Kinston hospital Dec. 10-13. He turned himself in to authorities Dec. 14 and is free on bond.

Former District Attorney Wade Barber was prosecutor for the case. Barber resigned on Dec. 30, and new district attorney Carl Fox has not decided whether to prosecute the case himself or appoint a special prosecutor.

The indictments charge Sandlin unlawfully shipped cadavers to medical schools, a plastic surgeon and a hospital. Cindy Mayes, an investigatorial assistant in the district attorney's office, would not comment on where, specifically, the cadavers were sent.

Sandlin was also charged with defrauding the Veterans Administration and the UNC medical school. Sandlin faces 18 charges for illegally filing for VA benefits for the funerals of 18 veterans

The grand jury also charged Sandlin with seven counts of fraud. The indictments charge Sandlin concealed his ownership of Professional Mortuary Services, and that he illegally awarded over $20,000 in University business to his company, including transportation and embalming services.

Sandlin contended he had the authority to arrange the business, according to Loflin.

Varied financial aid options available for UNC students

By RACHEL STIFFLER

The UNC Student Aid Office will begin distributing financial aid checks for this semester and handing out Financial Aid Forms for next year today.

The forms for next year are due March I, and meeting this deadline is extremely important to be guaranteed consideration for aid, said Eleanor Morris, UNC financial aid director.

Morris said it was important that students applying for aid also realized that they and their families should fill out the forms together to make sure the information on the form regarding the family's financial situation was correct.

"Another important thing for the students to realize is thet 75-80 percent of our money comes from federal aid, so we follow federal regulations in determining aid for all programs," Morris said. She said the Student Aid Office was required by the federal government to check up on the applications to make sure that the information supplied on the financial aid form was correct. In order to do this, they require students to submit a copy of their families' tax forms along with the applications. This checking enables the student aid office to make sure the money is distributed to the people needing it most, Morris said.

In most aid programs, the staff of the Student Aid Office first determines the amount each student needs, Morris said. They then consider the total amount of aid money available and determine a uniform percentage of that need that can be met with a scholarship or grant. According to Morris, the office was able to meet 55 percent of each student's need in this manner last year.

The remainder of each student's need is met with a loan or with a campus job, and the student can indicate his preference on his aid application. "They should give it serious thought," Morris said, adding that, most students opted for a loan. "It bothers me to see the amount of money that students allow themselves to (accumulate) in debt."

Morris said many students might not want to work because they were concerned they would not have enough time for their studies. Some choose to get a loan for part of their four years and to work during the years when they do not have a loan, she said. Whatever the case, Morris said she would like to see students form a long-range plan to finance their educations. "We would be delighted to help students draw up a plan," she said, adding that trained financial aid counselors in the office would make appointments with students who have questions anytime except during the hectic time of disbursement of checks.

Students who apply for aid are automatically considered for all financial aid programs of the University, including the James M. Johnston Scholarship, based on outstanding academic achievement and promise and financial need, Morris said. Some of these programs are:

- · Scholarships, which include over $1.5 million awarded yearly to students with financial need and above average academic records.
- Grants include the Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grants, University Grant funds, and Minority Presence Grants. They are based on financial need.
- · Pell Grants are based on the family's financial circumstances and are awarded by the federal government.
- Loans include the Federal National Direct Loan Program, the Federal Health Professions Loan Program, and University loan programs. These are available at low interest and do not accrue until after the student graduates and begins to make payments on his or her loan.
- Jobs are part-time, require no more than 10-15 hours a week, and pay at least the federal minimum hourly wage. When at all possible, the student is placed in a job matching his or her interests and skills.

Other sources of assistance outside of the University are the Guaranteed Student Loan and PLUS loans for parents of undergraduate students, lent by banks or other lending agencies at low interest and not required to be repaid until after the student graduates.

Students wishing to apply for summer school aid must complete the Summer Session Financial Aid Application, also due on March 1.

Incoming freshmen will hear about their financial aid in May if they met the March deadline. Continuing undergraduates will hear from the office during the summer, usually in July, because their grades must be taken into account before they can be awarded aid. Morris said she advised all of these students to come by the Student Aid Office before they leave for summer vacation to make sure the office had all the necessary information. Morris said it was important for students to know they must reapply each year for aid. "The need does change every year," she said. "A lot of students don't realize that what they get their freshman year may not be what they'll get later. It varies according to the family situation."

REAL PIT BAR-B-Q

She said the office should be informed by students receiving aid of any unusual family circumstances, such as illness, hospitalization or a parent's retirement, because these factors could influence financial need. A student should also let the office know if he will be unable to contribute the amount he is expected to pay from his summer earnings, she said.

Despite publicity that federal budget cutbacks have drastically affected college students. Morris said federal aid had remained stable during the past few years. But she said it was too early to tell how this year's federal budget cuts would affect student aid and emphasized that this was all the more reason for students to apply on time.

She also stressed that no student should dismiss his family's ability to get aid before applying because aid was based on the family's entire situation and not strictly on income.

"I admit our office has as much red tape as any other department in the University or any other government or service agency," Morris said. "We are painfully aware that students get misinformed and misunderstand. All we can say is that if something (we've told you) doesn't seem right, come back and ask again," she said.
