Marnell, Killian lead fencing attack in '85

By DAVID McCULLOUGH
Staff Writer

A fine showing in the preseason has propelled the UNC women's fencing team to the status of national contenders this season. Two fencers who stand out as the leaders of this team are senior co-captains Cindy Killian and Karen Marnell.

Killian suggests her primary role as captain is to boost morale and to motivate her teammates.

"A lot of times, less experienced fencers get frustrated and discouraged," Killian said. "I encourage them by saying 'I was in your position once and I know how you feel.' The best thing to do is show them they always have different moves to apply."

While encouragement is helpful, Killian suggests that self-confidence plays a far more important role. "If you don't have self-confidence, you're not going to be an effective fencer," she said. "I think it's a Catch 22 because if you have self-confidence you're going to try a lot of things and be more successful at a faster rate. Self confidence perpetuates itself in this manner."

The self-confidence and drive which Killian developed through fencing also has been beneficial outside of Fetzler Gym.

"When you're in college you are going to learn a lot, but many times you are not challenged," Killian said. "For most people, fencing is unknown and new — challenging both physically and emotionally. It teaches you to take the initiative and try something new."

Marnell, the most experienced fencer on the squad, adds a different dimension to the leadership scheme. Her primary role is to introduce techniques and strategy to her less experienced teammates.

"I work with giving lessons and the coaching aspect of fencing because of my experience," Marnell said.

Teaching teammates can be a cumbersome task when your students are of similar age and stature.

"Before practice, you will be talking about going out and then all of a sudden you're in an authority position," Marnell said. "I have no patience and I come across as pushy at times, but once (team members) get to know me, coaching is not difficult. Usually I demonstrate an attack and make them practice it until they can do it with their eyes closed."

Marnell says her aggressive nature helps her to concentrate on completing the task at hand, both in and away from fencing competition.

"I really work hard at what I'm doing, whether it's fencing or something else."

The balance of power between these two co-captains should help provide North Carolina with a balanced attack for the spring season.

throws and let them back in the game. I feel our kids played well enough to win but so did North Carolina's."

Driesell said there was some confusion on that final inbound play, since he had told Gatlin to call time-out should he get in trouble. "He just made a mistake," Driesell said.

That mistake was one of seven turnovers charged to Gatlin, who managed only nine points but dished out 12 assists. "I thought Adkins was going to come all the way to the ball," Gatlin said of the final play. "But I just threw a bad pass."

Hunter credited Coach Dean Smith with making the correct defensive call on that play. "He told us what the play was going to be, but we thought it was going to Lenny (Bias). I saw Adkins open, and I faked to make (Gatlin) think Adkins was open."

Popson said his 15-footer that put the Tar Heels ahead with :05 remaining was not a shot he would normally take. "I was just so open, so I took it," he said, noting that he wasn't sure if it was good when he released it. "As soon as it left my hand it was either going in or going out."

Popson tied Daugherty for UNC high scorer with 14 points and added five rebounds. Defensively in the second half, Popson cooled off Bias, who sizzled from the field in the first 20 minutes by scoring 16. Bias finished with 23 and was not a factor in the final 60 seconds, although he added a meaningless field goal as time ran out.

But Peterson and Ranzino Smith said they were looking for the basket on the game-winning break but passed the ball away at the last second. "I was just going to go up for a prayer and hope someone got the rebound, but I looked up and could see David at the free throw line," Peterson said.

The teams were rarely separated by more than a field goal difference, as both teams battled through an assortment of man defenses. Maryland rarely dropped into any obvious zones, while the Tar Heels mixed up the defense more often.

The Tar Heels led 39-38 at the half, but only after both teams had run off long scoring streaks which canceled each other out. Several times in the second half the Terrapins tried to pull away but could do no better than a 55-50 edge with 11 minutes to play.

While both teams struggled around 50 percent from the foul line, they were hot from the floor, with UNC shooting 61.5 percent and Maryland at 58.5.

"I thought we were fortunate to win," Coach Smith said. "Maryland was poised away from home and well-prepared. But, you have to hand it to our team. We squeezed one out tonight, and I mean squeezed."

legislators, both of whom oppose state funding. Jordan has said he favors abortions in cases of rape and incest — not abortion on demand — although he supports continued state funding for abortions.

Brenda Summers, director of communications for Lt. Gov. Jordan, said Senate leadership would "certainly be more moderate than it has been" but added that former Lt. Gov. Jimmy Green was considered moderate by North Carolina standards.

"There will be different approaches to problems and new people taking leadership roles in the Senate," Summers said. "There will be fewer committees but more time in committee for debate. It will be a more open process."

Summers said she expected general agreement and cooperation between Martin and the Senate leadership. "Education and economic development will be the thrusts of the legislation, as both the governor and lieutenant governor ran their campaigns on those issues," she said. "We see that the two will work together at this point on a lot of issues, but it will depend on the governor's tax reforms and future budget proposals. They should be debated in the General Assembly."
