Books for larger classes to be put in library reserve

By LISA SWICEGOOD
Staff Writer

Thanks to a new Student Government program, textbooks for classes with 250 or more students will be on reserve in the Undergraduate Library beginning this semester.

The textbook reserve program, co-sponsored by Student Government and the Undergraduate Library, is designed to help students save money and give Student Government an academic purpose, according to Michele Killough, who heads the Textbook Reserve Task Force.

Rutledge Tufts, assistant manager of the Student Stores, said the idea came up three or four years ago when Student Government asked Student Stores about the possibility of a textbook rental system. Tufts said the Student Stores Advisory Committee looked into the idea, but concluded that in the long run it would be more expensive for students than purchasing the books. Instead, it was decided to increase the use of used books and to create the textbook reserve system.

Tufts said Student Stores planned to sell the Undergraduate Library used books and buy the books back if the library no longer wanted them at the end of each semester.

"We wanted to help their money go as far as possible, but we were unable to contribute books," Tufts said.

Student Stores supports the idea 100 percent, he said. "I think it's a great idea. It also is necessary because there are some kids who just can't afford to buy a stack of books," Tufts said.

Killough said Student Stores gave Student Government a list of all classes with an enrollment of 250 or more. Seventy-eight classes and 24 departments were covered.

About 25 new books were bought for the program using $800 donated by the Undergraduate Library. The Library has a policy not to buy used books and had to purchase new ones.

"We tried to make sure that the new books we bought will be used for about three or four more years," Killough said.

The rest of the textbooks needed were either donated by professors or were already on the library system and were simply moved to the reserve section.

"A lot of professors gave us copies of textbooks they had received from the publishers," she said.

Because of space, Killough said the system was limited to 40 books.

"We originally wanted a whole reading room but that was physically impossible," she said.

Next year Student Government hopes to find more money and space for the program. "We're hoping the Campus Governing Council will fund it so we can buy more books," she said.

The textbooks are located in the reserve section of the Undergraduate Library and may be checked out for two-hour periods.

Fast Break to reopen with new menu

By ELIZABETH HUTH
Staff Writer

All the students who run into Fast Break to grab a bite of nourishment before their classes have been at a loss since it closed early this semester.

However, ARA Food Services said The Commons, located on the ground floor of Lenoir Hall, will open either Jan. 16 or 17. "Originally we had hoped to open the 14th. However, right now the tentative date is set for the 16th," said Tony Hardee, ARA director.

The Fast Break, which served items from the grill and had a deli bar, has been moved to The Commons. The menu board used in Fast Break is already installed in the grill section of The Commons. However, the grill will now offer fried chicken, chicken nuggets, fish and roast beef. "We've expanded the variety even more," Hardee said.

Another area in The Commons is the Pit Stop, which will provide wrapped sandwiches, doughnuts, crackers and candy. The Pit Stop, now located in the Student Store, will close at the end of this semester.

In addition, there will be an area made especially for "sweet lovers." The Sweet Show will serve dipped ice cream, baked goods, birthday cakes and soft served yogurt.

The downstairs is carpeted and will seat 600 people. Painted walls and more lights brighten the renovated Pine Room, which previously had only 450 seats. Windows that were once covered up have been unboarded, and plants will be placed on the window sills. At each section there will be a register except at the grill which will have four to allow for faster service.

In a separate room is Itza Pizza parlor. At least 10 different pizza toppings will be available. Pizza will be sold by the slice as well as whole. Students can see thin and pan pizza, made from scratch, through a glass window.

Hardee said that with more points of distribution, service hopefully would be faster. There will be more seats available for students also. Lately, Lenoir Hall has had standing room only during the prime lunching time, he said. Positions are available for students seeking employment with the expansion of ARA Food Services. ARA's next project is the renovation of Chase Hall on South Campus. Plans include a cafeteria and grill.

spend its money on extending streets and sewer lines as one way to control development, Francisco said. Developers are now responsible for providing utility extensions, he said, but the town could take that responsibility and use it as a control mechanism. If the town didn't want development in a certain area, it could wait until development was desirable before extending utilities to that area, he said.

Also, on the topic of utilities, Brown said that better cooperation between the Orange Water and Sewer Authority (OWASA) and the Town of Chapel Hill could have an effect on development. "Both sides have said that the initiative for planning belongs to the other," he said. "Keeping communication lines open between Chapel Hill and OWASA could enhance their potential cooperation," Brown said.

Woods expressed a general feeling of urgency. "Unless something radical is done (to solve the planning problems) ...," he said, "the town will be inundated by developments of mediocrity."

Business reps to speak on employment opportunities

UNC students will have the chance to hear what the experts have to say about their job options at a "Business Speaks Out About the Liberal Arts" forum Wednesday afternoon. The discussion, sponsored by University Career Planning and Placement Services, will be held in the Great Hall at 4 p.m., Jan. 16.

The program is designed primarily for student advisors but is open to all students, according to Peggy McAllister, career planning counselor at UCPPS and moderator for the discussion. Faculty who work with liberal arts students have been invited, she said.

Employers from a variety of companies will be questioned by a UNC panel including professors, advisors and a student before the forum is opened for questions from the audience, McAllister said. Companies that will participate in the forum include E.J. Gallo Winery, IBM and Ivey's.

"We've tried to find people that represent employers from the entire range of those who recruit on college campuses," McAllister said. "Most of the people who will be there have full responsibility for hiring college graduates in their organizations."
