and I didn't want him to end it like this. Price is great and I know he doesn't mind me saying this, but this guy (Dalrymple) is my MVP here. He was incredible.

When Dalrymple picked up foul number four, Cremins had a difficult decision to make. "I was thinking about going with (John) Martinson or (Jack) Mansell," Cremins said. "I went with Mansell. I thought I'd go with it until the seven or eight minute mark. But if North Carolina had a little run — five, six or seven points, the thing would have been over. So I gambled and went back with Dalrymple. I thought if we stayed close until the end, we'd have a chance to win."

UNC coach Dean Smith said his team had much to be proud of despite the defeat. "This team should be proud to have been in the finals in this league this season," Smith said. "We can learn from this experience — when we have to have a basket, we can learn to execute better." Sunday was the first time in the tournament that UNC couldn't hold its own down the stretch. It had to rally from a 10-point deficit Friday against Wake Forest and win in overtime, then hold on in the final minutes to beat N.C. State Saturday, 57-51.

"I don't think there was a point where it slipped away," Hale said of the loss. "We thought we had it all the way to the end. There were a couple of possessions where we didn't execute as well as we should have, and a couple of times we had the shot and it didn't fall."

Tech, meanwhile, enters the NCAA tournament with a record that nearly flip-flops its 4-23 mark just four years ago, the year before Cremins saved the program from a most unholy death.

"It's so incredible," Joseph said. "They wanted to win it as much as we did, and we gutted it out for 40 minutes. Incredible."

spokesman for the council's community kitchen, said. "When students come to a town to go to college, that will be their focus and interest."

Students can get great help as volunteers since many do not have full-time jobs and can work times that many town residents cannot, File said.

File said that student groups were the most likely of the campus population to get involved in the shelter.

"We feel the permanent populace is more responsible and more likely to get involved in our work," File said.

Town residents also have strong opinions about the student population. Charles, a Chapel Hill native and a regular visitor to the Inter-Faith Council's overnight shelter who wishes to remain unidentified, said that more respect is given to students than to those who have lived in the town for years.

"The University is getting to be more in control of this town than the boys who have lived here," he said. "Job-wise, you've got to work at the hospital or the University, or take the slack."

"The students have given a lot to this town, a lot of potential and a lot of good times, but there's never been a thing in this town that just says 'This is Chapel Hill' without meaning the University," he said.

Charles said that many of his friends also believe that students receive special treatment.

"If some of us get in a car and raise hell on Franklin Street, we get hauled off to jail," he said. "But let some students do the same thing and nothing happens."

File agreed that students get more favorable treatment.

"Stores cater to students. Businesses are student-oriented," he said. "But it's something you can't criticize. Chapel Hill exists for students, it would cease to exist if the University got up and left."

resolution stating why it opposed the tuition increase.

BOG Chairman Philip G. Carson named a special 12-member committee to review athletic admissions policies. Carson called for the committee to review reports from each campus, after which it will decide if changes in policies need to be made.

Carson said of the committee's purpose, "It is not a witch hunt. It is not aimed at anybody. It is not because of anyone."

Carson proposed creating the committee after growing controversy arose over admissions policies for athletes. The N.C. General Assembly has recently seen bills introduced which would require a minimum 700 SAT score for all entering students. UNC officials have said that such a requirement would disqualify many black students from being admitted to the UNC school system.
