Women's hoops shocks Tenn.

By MIKE BERARDINO

Defense was the difference as 19thranked North Carolina whipped women's basketball powerhouse Tennessee, 82-68, Saturday afternoon in Carmichael Auditorium.

Although the 11th-rated Lady Volunteers (11-3) outrebounded the smaller Tar Heels 58-37, UNC (9-4) used a fullcourt pressure defense that forced 34 Tennessee miscues and rattled the visitors beyond recovery. Paced by senior guard Pam Leake's 19-point, eight-steal performance and forward Tia Poindexter's 18 points, North Carolina extended a 36-29 advantage into a 17-point bulge with just over three minutes left.

"They just were a much better team than we were today," much-revered UT coach Pat Summitt said of the Tar Heels. "This is as good a North Carolina team as I've seen." Indeed, aside from a weak effort on the boards, UNC dominated play throughout. The first six minutes of the second half, however, were marked by as strong a stretch of defensive intensity and overall execution as the Tar Heels have shown all

After Karla Horton pulled the Lady Vols within five, the Tar Heels went on a tear. North Carolina embarked on an 11-0 run aided in no small part by 13 consecutive Tennessee misfires. The spurt was highlighted by Leake's breakaway steal and subsequent behind-the-back assist to Poindexter at the 16-minute mark. Leake's antics ignited the vocal crowd of 373 and seemingly crushed the Lady Vols' confidence for good. Tennessee could come no closer than eight the rest of "The kids just played with a great deal of intensity," UNC coach Jennifer Alley said. "We came out aggressively at the very beginning and sort of rattled Tennessee. At no time did we become passive."

The Tar Heels' defensive intensity was reflected in the Lady Vols miserable sub-37 percent shooting performance. Freshman Melissa McCray led Tennessee with 16 points, while 6-2 forward Karla Horton contributed 13 points and 15 boards.

In contract North Carolina chat a simmering 61 percent (16-26) in the opening half before cooling off and finishing at just over 53 percent for the game. Poindexter's eight-for-10 shooting, mostly on inside efforts, led the Tar Heels. "I thought Tia's job on the boards was tremendous," Alley said of Poindexter, who also pulled down a gamehigh seven rebounds.

The rest of the UNC scoring burden was carried by Darlene Cannon's 12 points, Kathy Wilson's nine and Marsha Matthews' nine. Marlene List added seven points and six assists.

Especially noteworthy was Cannon's dozen, scored despite a foot injury which prevented her from starting and will necessitate exploratory surgery Thursday. The 5-4 junior point guard nailed 10 of 11 free throw attempts down the stretch.

North Carolina returns to action tonight with a 7:30 start against
