Local Filipinos express confidence in Aquino

By MATTHEW FURY

Some local Filipinos are glad that Marcos' opponent Corason Aquino has been named president of the Philippines, expressing hope that she will control the nation's economic problems.
Recaredo B. Reyes, president of the Philippine-American Association of North Carolina, said Aquino's first step must be to cleanse private business of corruption and to open jobs to qualified employees.

probably make a considerable effort to attract investment from abroad. The Philippines' ailing economy would benefit if the excessive flight of capital from the nation were reversed.

"She will be handicapped because the country is in turmoil economically," Filipino-American Hazel Snyder said.

Snyder expects the United States to send more economic and military aid to the Philippines. In the U.S. Senate's 1986 proposal, economic aid to the Philippines is to be reduced from $181.2 million to $125.6 million and military aid is to be increased from $64.7 million to $102.7 million in 1986, she said. The United States should reevaluate its program now that a popular democracy has been established, she said.

Snyder said she hoped that U.S. investors "create a healthy, competitive environment" and do not monopolize Philippine business, she said.

Linda McGloin, a Filipino who has lived in the United States since 1970 and an administrative assistant in the UNC School of Pharmacy, said Aquino should limit the overseas employment program. In this program, Filipino citizens must pay a lump sum of money to the government before looking for employment abroad.

"It's like selling themselves to draw money to the government," she said.

Aquino will not have problems with the New Peoples Army, Andrews said. "The communists will not find it easy to campaign when they're dealing with a liberal democratic government. If she can get things going, the communists will find themselves losing support.

Aquino has promised to recognize U.S. rights to the Subic Naval Base and the Clark Air Force Base, but she must decide if her country is going to renew the lease on the bases in 1991.

Snyder said it is mandatory that Aquino renew the lease. "If we are to remain democratic and independent, we must have those bases there." The bases are a large employment source for Philippine people, she said.

McGloin said she questions whether Aquino should renew the lease. "We've got to go back to the beginning and ask why the bases were put there in the first place."

Philippine independence was granted on July 4, 1946, on the condition that the United States be allowed to install military bases. "More and more people in the Philippines are asking if they are really independent," she said.

Tim McGloin of Durham, national coordinator for Friends of the Filipino People, told The Associated Press that he objected to Marcos' political asylum in the U.S.

Reyes, citing the early years of the leader's rule and his health problems, accepted Marcos' asylum in the United States.

UNC breaks slump

Tar Heels tie battle, win war over Cavs

The image was an unusual one. Inside Dean's Dome, which is revered for its polite and normally docile coach, team and fans, there was North Carolina center Brad Daugherty squaring off face-to-face with Virginia's Tom Sheehy. There was Sheehy tossing a ball that strikes UNC's Joe Wolf in the back of the head. And there were two benches emptying with players preparing to do battle without a basketball. When order is restored, nobody is hurt, Sheehy has a technical foul and the North Carolina basketball team has a fire in its eye which, in itself, humbles the Cavaliers, 85-79.

The incident took place with 12:22 remaining in the game and the Tar Heels leading 51-50. Jeff Lebo fed an open Daugherty under the UNC basket, but before the North Carolina center could make a move to the hoop, Sheehy bearhugged him to prevent the easy two. Then the sparks flew.

"Tom (Sheehy) grabbed me and wrapped me up," Daugherty explained later. "When we separated, he gave me a little jolt and then got in my face."

Sheehy quietly pleaded his case in the hallway outside the Cavalier locker room after the game. "I fouled Brad blatantly, but he misinterpreted it," he said. "He gave me a little shove, then I gave him a little shove and things got a little out of hand."

With regard to tossing the ball at Wolf's head, Sheehy was apologetic. "There's no room for that on the court," he said. "I lost my head, if I had it to do again, I wouldn't do it."

Before the incident, the evening had featured a relatively lackluster game between the Tar Heels and Olden Polynice who had a game-high 24 points. North Carolina (26-3, 10-3 in the ACC) rode a wave of emotion from traditional Senior Night festivities into the opening minutes, but were unable to put away the Cavaliers (18-8, 7-6) due mainly to UNC's 44 percent shooting from the field. Polynice was a one-man rally-buster with 10 first-half points before picking up his third foul with 4:24 left in the half.

Polynice was charged with his fourth foul with 17:17 left in the game and the UNC fans gleefully waved a temporary good-bye to their nemesis with a flurry of Carolina blue pom-poms. The Tar Heels celebrated Polynice's departure by running off six straight points, the final two coming on a driving slam by Daugherty that brought 21,444 fans and UVa coach Terry Holland to their feet. Holland called a timeout.

Re-enter Polynice and another turnaround jumper in the lane. Behind their inspirational leader the Cavaliers cut the lead to one, before fate visited the Dean Dome.

Sheehy's bearhug became the climax of the contest. "I thought that was a big play and turning point of the game," Holland said. "It did give the momentum back to North Carolina at a time when it seemed like we were fighting back."

With the fire crackling in their eyes, the Tar Heels ironically called upon two freshmen to turn out the lights on Senior Night. Jeff Lebo, who had shown up hours early at the Smith Center to work on his jump shot, with assistant coach Bill Guthridge, popped in 6-of-8 shots in the second half. "I really felt more confidence with my shot," said Lebo, who led the Tar Heels with 17 points.

Kevin Madden also shone during the stretch run, scoring two spectacular hoops on the fastbreak and contributing to the success of UNC's dreaded four corners.

After the game, Daugherty downplayed the altercation in favor of a more romantic subject. The victory was his last at home in a North Carolina uniform and he reflected upon the moment before the game when he was called to center court to celebrate four years as a Tar Heel.

"I'm really going to miss it next year," Daugherty said. "I think I won about $20 because I didn't cry."

Kuncl likens 'Old' dorms to Carr

By GUY LUCAS

Staff Writer

The circumstances for deciding whether to convert Old East and Old West dormitories into office buildings are similar to those that figured in the conversion of Carr Building to offices, said Director of Housing Wayne Kuncl.

Carr Building, now being renovated for use as office space, had served as a combination of offices and dorm rooms until this year.

A 1984 study of some of the University's oldest buildings showed that Carr Building, the Olde Campus buildings, Old East and Old West were in need of renovations, Kuncl said.

Because of a basic structural problem, the cost of renovating Carr Building was judged to be too expensive to be funded through dorm rent, Kuncl said.

"We decided it would probably be in the University's best interests to use (Carr) building for office space," he said. "I also was aware we were going to have Carmichael (dormitory) open. . . I didn't feel I could, as director of Housing, justify the spending of the rent money to fund the renovation."

Old East also suffers from structural problems. The extensive repair needed to renovate the building will probably make the costs high, Kuncl said, adding that no decision has been made on Old East's future.

"That's at least a year away," he said. "There's obvious needs in that building that we have yet to put a price tag on. We don't have a formal study or architectural study that would allow us to make that kind of decision."

A study on the extent of the repairs Old East needs and how much they are likely to cost is still under way, Kuncl said.

One difference between Old East and Carr Building is that there are about twice as many students in Old East as there were in Carr before the building

Freshmen shine on seniors' day

By BOB YOUNG

Senior day? Did you say senior day?

While UNC's 85-79 victory over Virginia was intended to be a tribute to seniors Brad Daugherty, Warren Martin and James Dye, the game turned out to be a showcase for a pair of freshmen, as Jeff Lebo and Kevin Madden helped show the Cavaliers the road back to Charlottesville.

The final statistics will show that Lebo scored 17 points on 6-for-10 shooting from the field, 5-for-6 from the line, while Madden finished with 10 points on a 4-for-8 performance from the field and 2-for-4 from the line.

But the duo's importance for the team was much greater than the sum of their points — just ask Kenny Smith.

"When Jeff had to leave the game in the first half (after getting into early foul trouble), I felt a little awkward out there," Smith said. "I found myself in places where I usually don't find myself."

And how about Madden's play, Kenny?

"Kevin just played an exceptional game," Smith said. "He played very well on offense, but his defensive intensity was just great."

Add to these accolades the fact that the two frosh had only four points (all Madden's) and three personal fouls (all Lebo's) between them after the first half — which saw Virginia build up a 37-33 lead — and their performances shine even brighter.

It was a deep-in-the-corner jumper by Lebo that pulled UNC even with Virginia at 39 just over two minutes into the second half.

And it was Madden's play in the last five minutes that helped the Tar Heels put the game safely away. Madden came in for Curtis Hunter with 5:14 to play and in the next 2½ minutes dished out assists to Lebo and Daugherty, connected on two foul shots and scored on a breakaway layup on a pass from Lebo.

And although Hale — who remains out of action indefinitely — was definitely missed, especially when Lebo warmed the bench in the first half, the team survived his absence quite nicely.

But at times Wednesday night, it wasn't hard to confuse a fastbreaking, charge-taking and free throw-making Jeff Lebo for senior guard Steve Hale.

And that's the way it should be, if freshmen are destined to shine on Senior Day.

STV to look for Letterman imitators

By ANDREA M. BEAM

Staff Writer

Wake the kids. Phone the neighbors. It's the David Letterman contest — more fun than humans should be allowed to have.

Student Television is accepting applications until March 21 for potential David Letterman clones. STV will then select 10 contestants from these applications to strut their Letterman stuff on April 1 before a live audience in Great Hall.

"Contestants don't have to look like David Letterman," said Derrick Ivey, Letterman contest producer. "It's more like a David Letterman behavior contest. The contest is open to both women and men. So you don't have to look like David Letterman."

Applications for the contest are available at the Student Union desk, or at the STV office, Room 207A Suite D of the Student Union.

The winner of the contest will host This is It, an STV production similar to Late Night with David Letterman, Ivey said. The show, to be videotaped April 5, would allow for the winner's creative input, he said. This is It will be videotaped before a live audience.

The Letterman contest, to be held from 8 p.m. to 11 p.m., April 1 in Great Hall, is free. Students may bring alcoholic beverages if they have proper identification. Ivey said there would be some form of entertainment, such as a band similar to Paul Schaefer's band on the Letterman show.

Ivey said he tried to get Letterman to acknowledge the contest, but Letterman's NBC contract does not allow public appearances. Ivey added that Letterman could not produce a short videotape for the program for the same reason.

"We did talk to Letterman's secretary, though," Ivey said. "We may ask the contestants to interview her on the phone."

Ivey said after the 10 to 15 contestants were selected from the applicants, they would be asked to prepare an opening monologue, interview someone selected by the producers and perform a skit such as Letterman's "Mr. Curious."

"The selected contestants will also have to participate in a rehearsal before the contest just to make sure no one is really bad," Ivey said.

Ivey will judge the contestants with fellow producer John McQuiston and three other judges who have not been selected yet. Ivey said he would look for someone comfortable before a crowd.

"I'll look for quick wit, someone who can respond quickly to what other people say," Ivey said. "I also want originality, someone who thinks everything in life is funny — not slapstick — but an intelligent person."

Applications will ask, other than name and address, questions about David Letterman Show familiars. But, Ivey said, knowledge of the program was not a prerequisite.

Ivey said there were three basic questions in the application:

- If you were given the power to genetically alter humans, how would you change Larry "Bud" Melman?
• Would you agree that Paul Schaefer is psychologically wedged in the 1970s? Why?
• Do feel Chris Elliot is necessary to the David Letterman Show? Do you even know who Chris Elliot is? Do you care?

Reagan warns Congress against defense cuts

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, trying to reverse dwindling support for his defense buildup, said Wednesday it would be "reckless, dangerous and wrong" for Congress to reduce his $320 billion military budget request.

Congress already has "undercut our negotiators" at the Geneva arms talks by banning tests of anti-satellite weapons and unilaterally giving the Soviets "a concession they could not win at the bargaining table," the president said.

In a bluntly worded address prepared for national broadcast from the Oval

Office, Reagan said cutting defense now is "not cheap (and) it's not safe."

He said it would be "backsliding of the most irresponsible kind."

"Just as we are sitting down at the bargaining table with the Soviet Union, let's not throw America's trump card away," Reagan said.

In a brief reference to the ouster of Philippine President Ferdinand Marcos and his replacement by Corason Aquino — his first public statement on the switch — Reagan applauded the "remarkable restraint shown by both sides to prevent bloodshed during these last tense days."

"Our hearts and hands are with President Aquino and her new government as they set out to meet the challenges ahead," he said.

House Democratic leader Jim Wright, giving his party's response to Reagan's address, said the president's defense budget must be cut to protect the nation from another danger — huge deficits.

"We think the deficits themselves pose a danger to our national security," Wright said in remarks prepared for broadcast after the president's speech.

Wright said if Congress approves the 11.9 percent boost in authorized military spending that Reagan sought for the fiscal year beginning Oct. 1, "we'd be spending almost four times as much on the military by the end of this decade as the nation spent during the Vietnam War."

Wright criticized "glaring waste," such as $400 hammers and $7,600 coffee pots, and said "even the Pentagon should be held to strict standards of accountability in spending taxpayers' money."
