Duke foul-up lands team in big trouble

By HAZY DAVY
Sports Editor

FUQUAY VARINA — The Duke University basketball team, which last night lost the NCAA championship game in Dallas (Awww), has suffered another bitter blow as it has been placed on NCAA and ACC probation for the next two seasons as a result of violations stemming from the recruiting of Marty Nessler and Kevin Strickland.

Sources close to the investigation say Nessler, a 7-2 junior center, was reportedly offered a Dominique Wilkins poster, a videocassette of the movie "Metalstorm: The Destruction of Jarid Syn," and an autographed baseball from four non-starting Durham Bulls.

Strickland, a 6-6 sophomore swingman, was offered Johnny Dawkins' old clothes, Sade and Air Supply albums, a package of oven mitts and a "Teen Wolf" movie poster.

Nessler and Strickland were instrumental in many Duke victories this season, especially the December 2 win over East Carolina. Both players' point totals (Nessler's six and Strickland's eight) were season highs. The combined total of 14 points was the difference in the Devils' 98-66 victory.

Duke's director of athletics, Bread N. Butters, said that he knew of the investigation, but chose to "mind my own business" until after the Final Four.

"I just chose to mind my own business," Butters said. "I let Coach K do his own thing. We didn't think anybody would notice or care. Just ask (sports persona) Brent Musburger about our spotless reputation. And if he still loves us, then those other guys

(at the NCAA) don't count."

Brent Musburger, CBS sports analyst and all-around keen guy, couldn't believe the charges.

"I can't believe these charges," he said. "The program down in Durham so well exemplifies what college basketball is all about. We're talking student-athletes. We're talking graduating student-athletes. We're talking suburban-bred, well-fed, well-read, Club Med, don't-like-the-Grateful-Dead student-athletes."

Duke coach Mike Krzyzewski said last night that he knew of the Nessler situation.

"Well, Marty just had so many other offers," he said. "I mean, we were competing with the University of Bridgeport and the Colorado School of Mines. What else could I do?"

However, when asked about the recruiting of Strickland, Krzyzewski seemed confused.

After Strickland was pointed out to Krzyzewski in the locker room, he was heard to say, "So that's who he is. I just thought he was Dawkins' brother. They're always wearing the same clothes."

The penalties imposed by the league and the NCAA include a reduction of scholarships over a two-year period, a one-year ban on television appearances, Krzyzewski changing his name to Shushevskee and the team taking games against Harvard and Stetson off its schedule.

"We can't give the impression that we condone activity of that sort or names with that many consonants," said a spokesman for the NCAA.

Bitty bomb blasts between buildings, but both Berlin blockade, beautiful bunkhouses bypassed — bodacious bedlam brews, bringing beta bombardment.

Bomb: Ka-Boom! balooey!

By NAGGIE SAKHIE
Disassociated Press Staff Writer

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (DP) — A nuclear explosion rocked the shanties and the Berlin-type wall built in front of South Building on the University of North Carolina campus Monday, strewing clapboard and refuse around the quad area. No one was injured in the blast.

Members of Students Taking Action In Dormancy (STAID), a radical, middle-of-the-road faction, called UNC Chancellor Christopher C. Fordham III minutes after the incident, saying they were tired of protest on campus and planted the bomb to make their point.

The bomb destroyed the shanties built by the UNC Anti-Apartheid Support Group, and the wall built by the UNC College Republicans and Students for America.

The shanties were built to protest the South Africa's apartheid system of government, in which the white minority rules the country and throws extravagant orgies while non-whites hold no positions of power or fun.

The wall was built to protest oppression by Communist governments and, more indirectly, the shanties, which College Republicans and SFA members have described as "ugly and putrid, like bubbling corpuscles of fat on hot pavement."

The 0.0000003-megaton bomb, containing enough explosive force to blow Johnny Dawkins' nose, exploded at 3 a.m., waking residents as far away as Old East Dormitory and shaking birds from telephone lines on Franklin Street.

FBI investigators found evidence that the bomb was planted precisely between the shanties and the wall.

White House spokesman Lawrence M. Speakes said in a press conference that President Ronald W. Reagan had absolutely nothing to do with anything.

Campus officials said they hoped such events would not occur in the future and did not know where to draw the line on displays of campus protest, citing the First Amendment.

"I'm caught between a rock and a hard place," said an official, who spoke on the condition of anonymity. "The conservatives, the liberals — hell, I don't know my left from my right."

Chancellor, faculty call it quits

By APRIL PHOOLLE

UNC will close indefinitely after final exams end May 7, Chancellor Christopher C. Fordham III announced Friday.

"I had a meeting with the faculty yesterday," he said. "We all felt just pretty tired of the whole thing. We're going to hand out diplomas to all current students, then call it quits for a couple years. Maybe we'll feel better by then."

Fordham explained that more than 90 percent of the University's faculty was experiencing symptoms of chronic burnout, including threatening their slower students at knifepoint and making obscene phone calls to former UNC system President Bill Friday.

"Bill's a little ticked-off right now," Fordham said. "That's part of the closing thing. We think he'll want us back once he calms down a little."

Friday said Saturday he had received numerous calls Wednesday and Thursday, and at least two calls a day Monday and Tuesday. There were no calls this or last Sunday, Friday said.

"I always got a couple every semester," he said. "It comes with being president. But lately it got ridiculous and it got on my nerves. So I called Chris and said, 'Cut this stuff out or I'll shut you down.'"

Friday said he might consider reopening the University as soon as May 1987. He said he would not open it sooner because it would take him at least that long to recover from some of the phone calls, which he described as "really, really, I mean primo hot stuff, but irritating."

Though only seniors will participate in the graduation ceremony, Fordham said all current students will receive diplomas.

"What the hell," Fordham said. The UNC Board of Trustees issued a statement Sunday saying the University would be used as an exclusive vacation resort and executive bordello until it reopened as a school.

BOT Chairman J. Clint Newton Jr.

said the resort would be named, appropriately enough, "The Southern Part of Heaven." The cost for staying at the resort would be $5,000 per month or $50,000 for the whole year, not including dormitory rent. Prostitute charges will be negotiable.

Dorm rent would vary from $300 per month for a room in historic Old East with no air conditioning to $1,000 per month in brand spanking new Katherine K. Carmichael dormitory, which has air conditioning.

Newton said the BOT had not decided yet what to do with money raised by the resort.

"I don't know," he said. "Maybe we'll invest it. Maybe we'll build a real resort down by the Smith Center. That way we won't have as far to drive our limos. Heck, we could walk or get some electric golf carts. And we'll put a bordello next to the arena."

The Tar Heel basketball team will no longer be allowed to compete in college athletics, at least until they have a school, NCAA spokesman Jocko

Strappe said Friday.

"Nope, sorry, can't do that," he said. Coach Dean Smith said the Tar Heels probably would jump to the NBA.

"What the hell," Smith said.

The Tar Heels also have several offers from other universities who are willing to banish their current teams. Offers received so far have come from such places as Dook University, N.C. State and the University of Virginia.

"Nah," Smith said. "We'll go pro. Maybe that way we can get away from Billy Packer."

Students were generally apathetic.

"We'll get our diplomas, I don't care," said Cathy Arsis, a sophomore undeclared major from Gum Neck.

Tymtaliv Tymtadye, a junior economics major from New Delhi, India, said he would be sorry to see the school close, but he was glad the school was handing out diplomas rather than leaving students on their own.

"What the hell," he said.

Bigfoot terrifies staff of sinking USS Davis

By MACK McMAKK

A seven-foot tall bigfoot, normally only found in remote parts of the Northwestern United States, rampaged through Davis Library Friday, causing $3,000 in damages and devouring several librarians.

"All I could do is scream," said librarian Olivia Bukwurm. "I mean, there he was, right in front of me, howling and howling, chewing on poor Mrs. Weatherby."

The huge furry brute apparently had been hibernating in the cavernous Davis basement.

University officials can only speculate how the creature got into the library's basement in the first place, but some suspect the supernatural is to blame.

"That's what I think has been responsible for all these horrible crimes that no one can find the attacker for," said Chancellor Christopher C. Fordham III. "This didn't used to happen. I remember when you could live here 20, 30 years and never see a bigfoot."

Fordham said he would form a hunting party to track down and kill the creature, last seen headed away from the shanties in front of South Building, leaving destruction in its wake there as well.

"Well yeah, he kind of busted things up," said Dale McKinley of the Anti-Apartheid Support Group. "But it's not as if you'd notice or anything."

"I'm going to get a gun and keep it by the door," said Bud Wizer, a sophomore from Raleigh. "I'm not going to class until they catch that thing. I got enough beer to hold off an army. I'll just take the gun with me to the bathroom."

Khadafy cologne melts hearts

From Disassociated Press reports

TRIPOLI, Libya — Libyan leader Moammar Khadafy announced Monday that a new line of cologne, "Desert Nights," would be manufactured soon by Fly-by-Night Industries.

The cologne, which will smell like camel dung and body odor, will be modeled after the swarthy, dark-haired dictator, who dresses like an Arabian Bryan Adams.

"My cologne will show you Americans how a real macho man should smell," Khadafy said, scratching his armpit. "It will be great. A leader should have his own distinctive, personal stink. Reagan smells like Brylcreem and black shoe polish."

Graduate School Enrollment Surges

WASHINGTON — The U.S. Department of Education released a report Monday saying American college students are "signing up in droves" for graduate schools nationwide in response to Reagan's blatantly militaristic actions.

"I don't want to be drafted," a Michigan student said. "To hell with that."

Graduate school deans called the surge of applications "nifty," saying the president's actions were a financial boom to universities everywhere.

"And I thought he was cutting back on educational funding," said Smi Ling Fool, dean of graduate studies at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. "What a great American guy."

Martin Breaks Hopping Record

RALEIGH — Republican Gov. "Jumping" Jim Martin has broken the world record for the number of consecutive jumps on a pogo stick while eating pudding, the Guinness Book of World Records reports.

Martin reportedly has been taking time off from state legislature sessions to train, hopping around the governor's mansion like a bunny rabbit on amphetamines and spilling Jell-O Instant pudding down the front of his shirt.

Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan said he was happy for the leader but was annoyed by the pounding above his basement bedroom.

"All he gave me was this damn bug-infested, rat-bag cot to sleep on, and now I can't even sleep," Jordan said, pounding Ritz crackers into dust on his desk.

"What can a guy do," he said.

Aesthetic discontent cause of resignation

By BILL FOLD
Staff Writer

Student Body President Bryan Hassel said Monday he would be resigning "as soon as I can pack up my tricycle," because the wallpaper in Suite C clashes with his Winnie the Pooh sheets at home.

"I mean, Christopher Robin is so cool," he said. "But this stuff, this stuff is like the inside of a St. Bernard's ear — Oh, that's gross."

Hassel said he had tried many times and even put in a requisition form to get Winnie the Pooh paraphernalia in the Square Office.

Pooh Products Inc. is now defunct, but in its heyday manufactured a complete office line of Pooh telephones, letterhead stationery, pen sets, and custom-made, personalized, autographed, decorator, designer paperweights in a range of colors, patterns, textures, sizes, styles, emblazoned with one's favorite character from the series of children's books by author A. A. Milne and Tigger, too.

"You know, they just don't make the stuff anymore," he said. "Some guy said that C. D. Spangler got the last batch, so I just said 'to hell with all this president crap.'"

Hassel said he may consider running for UNC system president.

The ornate Executive Toilet did have a Winnie the Pooh toilet paper holder, but Hassel said it just wasn't enough to keep him in office.

"Some people just don't understand," he said when asked about his slightly-irregular Pooh fixation. "Linu: had his blanket, rabbits have their feet, and I have my Pooh-bear."

"Lovely Pooh-bear," he crooned, closing his eyes and smiling.

According to the Instrument of Judicial Governance, the official, uninterpretable last word on matters like this, anyone is eligible to run for the office.

Moe, Larry and Curly, of Stoooge fame, are the odds-on favorites for the office.

"Yuk, yuk, yuk," Curly said in a

Monday press conference. "Yuk, yuk, yuk, yuk."

"Ah, shaddap," Moe replied, poking Larry in the eye and bopping Curly on the head for no apparent reason. Curly grabbed a Boston cream pie from a Sara Lee delivery boy who was passing by and tossed it at Moe.

"Yuk, yuk, yuk," Curly said as the pie missed Moe and hit SBP hopeful Dinah Shore, lodging whipped cream in Shore's left nostril.

"America's cooking with Holly Farms chicken," she said mechanically before she stuffed a lemon meringue pie down Curly's pants. Curly then chucked a blueberry chiffon pie as the whole room erupted into utter pandemonium.

Library woes: UFO steals five students

By TERASHY RYTTER
Staff Writer

A group of five UNC students was kidnapped by a UFO Saturday, then returned after being forced to eat kittens.

"It really happened!" exclaimed Bigge Lye, a junior from Apex. "They turned us into vampires and we had to eat live kittens. I'll never forget it."

Fig Pucker, a senior from Boone, said it was the most intensely satisfying experience he ever had.

"Oooo, it was just so gruesome," he said. "But it was almost sexual, to me, but that could just be like a Freudian word association with kittens. All the meowing, oooo, they just didn't like it, the kittens I mean."

Raja Purami, a freshman from Kabul, Afghanistan, said he hadn't noticed anything wrong until after he was returned to earth.

"Well, it was just like a dream I had last night," he said. "Only it was a spaceship instead of a Russian tank and I was eating kittens instead of kissing an ugly, manure-smelling heifer."

Purami said he found out it wasn't a dream when the other two students told him so.

The University and Chapel Hill police departments said they had no reports of UFOs anywhere near the campus Saturday night.

"There was absolutely nothing unusual reported," said Sgt. Flatte Foote of the University Police. "It was just business as usual. I thought I heard something outside, but I never saw anything, so it doesn't count."

Detective Harry Callahan of the Chapel Hill Police Department said there had been no reports of UFOs to his office.

"Now back in San Francisco, we used to get these kind of fruitcakes all the time," he said. "But here, well I'm still waiting. It would just make my day."

Callahan said the only unusual occurrence that night had been reported by Dorothy Ozbekner, 62, of 342 Twilight Dr. Ozbekner's report was not considered reliable since she appeared to have been smoking marijuana, Callahan said.

Ozbekner said, "Nc, I wasn't. I was just sitting here, playing with my kitties, then they were gone."
