

Field house center to aid athletes

The Student Athletic Development Center, under construction to aid UNC's athletes in their studies as well as their bodies, should be completed on schedule September 1, according to Paul Hoolahan, associate athletic director.

The center is an addition to Kenan Field House near the football stadium. Overcrowding in the field house, and the need for adequate space for players and visiting teams were two of the reasons for the addition, Hoolahan said.

Besides inadequate space, Hoolahan said the academic development program needed to be centralized. Ideally, there should be a place to house tutorial centers and weight-training areas, so the players wouldn't have to go to places like Dey Hall for study hall, he said.

"(The development center) is going to give them a chance to utilize some of the equipment," he said.

The center's upper level will have academic materials to aid football players as well as members of the entire athletic program in their studies.

In the past, athletes had to go to the various halls for language labs and tutoring. The upper level will house those same materials.

Computer-aided labs, language labs, private tutoring rooms, carrels and the offices of the Academic Support Staff would also be in this level.

The lower level will house equipment for the athletes' physical development, including weight-training devices.

In Kenan Field House, the visitors' locker room will be enlarged, and dark room facilities and a laundry room will be added, Hoolahan said.

The center's funding has come from athletic reserve money that has accumulated over past years, he said.

Other students may be able to use the center's upper level along with the athletes, Hoolahan said, but University officials will have to give the okay first.

Hoolahan said he believed Georgia Tech was the only other Atlantic Coast Conference school that had a similar facility.

"I think Georgia Tech combines theirs into just one building that holds the offices as well," Hoolahan said.

UNC's facility is two separate buildings — the field house and the center, he said.

This new addition will also help in recruitment, by showing the prospective players what the program has to offer, Hoolahan said.

"We're very proud of what we have accomplished with this building," he said.

During the first and second weeks in September, there will be an open house for the students and the public, Hoolahan said.

Lenoir Hall grounds to be landscaped

The barren land on Lenoir Cafeteria's north side will soon be prime space for a picnic lunch.

Landscaping around Lenoir Hall is scheduled to begin in mid-April, according to Physical Plant Director Claude E. "Gene" Swecker.

Swecker said an oblong grass area would be planted on Lenoir Hall's north side, and two benches would provide students with a sitting area, he said.

Students will also be able to sit on brick planter walls that will surround Lenoir Hall on the north and east sides, Swecker said. Periwinkle and cherry trees will be planted in late fall in the walls, he said.

The concrete sidewalk between Lenoir and the Walter Royal Davis Graduate library will be replaced with a brick patio stretching between the two buildings, Swecker said.

He said the trash dumpsters on Lenoir's north side would be moved across the street to the northwest corner of Davis Library. The dumpsters will be enclosed by a screen, he said.

The grass area between Davis Library and the Student Union will also be covered with brick, Swecker said.

He said the landscaping materials would cost about $25,000, but he estimated the total cost of the project, to be completed next fall, at about $50,000.

Events planned for library week

April 7 marks the beginning of National Library Week, and the Chapel Hill Public Library is sponsoring several programs for area citizens.

Mary Morrow, a local bookbinder, will present a demonstration and discussion on book-binding today at noon, said Mark Bayles, a public service librarian for the Chapel Hill Public Library.

This presentation will take place in the meeting room of the library and interested persons are urged to bring a brown bag lunch.

On Tuesday the film "A Raisin in the Sun" will be shown from 2:00 p.m.

to 5:00 p.m. in the meeting room. This film will also be shown on Wednesday from 6:30 p.m. to 9:00 p.m.

On Thursday a storytime for preschoolers ages three and a half to five will be held in the children's room at 3:30 p.m.

On Friday a "Meet the Author Tea" will take place from 4 p.m. to 5 p.m. in the meeting room. Dr. Louis Rubin, a UNC University Distinguished Professor in the Department of English, will discuss "Algonquin Books and Publishing in North Carolina." This lecture is sponsored by the Friends of the Chapel Hill Public Library.

No events are scheduled at UNC to celebrate National Library Week, but according to Karen S. Seibert, an associate librarian for Public Services, there may be events scheduled for next year.

Seibert said Davis Library might feature the opinions of a campus figure and several students concerning what book had the most influence over their lives and what the library means to them. Seibert stressed that no plans were definite at this time though.

Seibert also said a main reason no displays were set up for National Library Week this year was because the available displays had been booked a year in advance.

National Library Week is sponsored by the American Library Association.

World health to be theme of events

The International Health Forum, a group of public health and medical students, has declared April 7-11 "World Health Week" to raise awareness of issues in international health, said Tom O'Connor, a member of the World Health Week coordinating committee.

He said forum members wanted to promote a broader understanding of the conditions that led to disasters in underdeveloped nations, especially for students outside the medical and public health fields.

The two speakers and three films planned for this week are free and open to the public, he said.

"With all the coverage of famines in Ethiopia and other parts of Africa, people only get a view of the disasters that happen," O'Connor said. "We rarely see any publicity about the underlying health conditions that exist in the Third World."

He said infectious diseases like cholera that had been wiped out in developed countries were still major killers in underdeveloped countries.

World Health Week could educate people about such conditions and what was being done about them, he said.

Since Monday is internationally recognized as World Health Day, O'Connor said, the forum's programs were planned as an expansion of that concept.

Monday International health authority Dr. George Lipcott, the week's keynote speaker, will give an overview of world health, "Health For All by the Year 2000: An Overview," at 12:30 p.m. Monday in the School of Public Health auditorium.

Lipcott, dean of the school of medicine of City University of New York, was assistant attorney general from 1977-81 and has worked on task forces studying rural medicine in the People's Republic of China, Pakistan, the Philippines and many African countries, O'Connor said.

Tuesday "That Our Children Will Not Die," a film about health care clinics in Nicaragua, will be shown at 12:30 p.m. in room 249 of the School of Public Health.

Wednesday At 12:30 p.m. a film about health care improvements in Nicaragua since the 1979 revolution, "Nicaragua Revolution Es Salud" (Revolution Is Health), will be shown in 106 Berryhill Hall. A report by Dr. Bruce Goldberg, who went on a public health fact-finding delegation to Nicaragua in 1985, will follow.

Thursday A film about primary health care in Ghana, "Health for All-Sankofa: Tradition and Development," will be shown at 4:00 p.m. in room 249 of the School of Public Health.

Friday Economist Robert Williams will speak at 12:30 p.m. on "Export Agriculture and the Crisis for Central America" in 105 Berryhill Hall.

Lesbian and gay awareness promoted

The Carolina Gay and Lesbian Association has proclaimed Monday April 7 through Friday April 11 as "Lesbian and Gay Awareness Week." The week is designed to raise consciousness about the gay and lesbian population at UNC.

The events planned are as follows: Monday: Storyteller Roxanne Seagraves will perform stories about lesbians and gay men at 7:30 p.m. in room 208 of the Union.

Tuesday: The Common Woman Chorus will give a concert in Gerrard

Hall at 8 p.m. Tickets, $3 for the public and $2 for students, are available from the CGLA and at the door the night of the show.

Wednesday: A bag lunch panel discussion with members of the gay and lesbian community, "Politics and the Gay/Lesbian Community," will be held at 12:30 p.m. in Room 226 of the Union.

At 7 p.m. the film "Pink Triangles" will be shown in the Union Film Auditorium. An informal discussion will follow.

Thursday: "Blacks and Gays: Breaking down barriers," a bag lunch panel discussion co-sponsored by the CGLA and the Black Student Movement will be held at 12:30 p.m. in Room 210 of the Union.

At 8 p.m. a presentation on "Gay and Lesbian Health Care: Issues and Strategies" will be held in Room 224 of the Union.

Friday: Students can wear blue jeans to support the gay and lesbian community. A dance will be held, in the Upendo Lounge at 9 p.m.

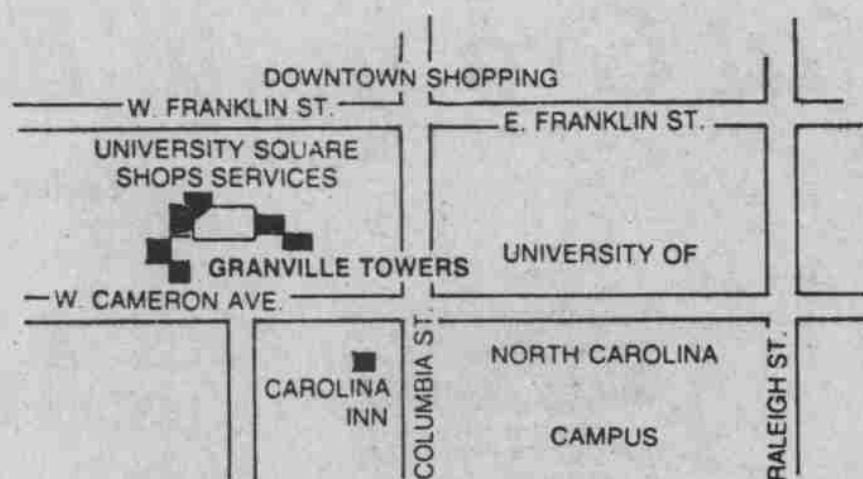

Outdoor exploration program to hold information meeting

Operation Raleigh, a four-year, round-the-world expedition founded for young people to take part in scientific research projects, will have a presentation open to all UNC students 7 p.m. Monday, April 7 in Room 210 of Hanes Hall.

Some level of outdoor experience and practical or scientific skill is helpful. Those selected will participate in different phases of the project, each lasting three months.

The expedition will go to Australia, New Zealand, Japan and Africa.
