

Makin' concessions

By ROBERT WILDERMANN
Staff Writer

Covering two events in one day caused major difficulties for the employees of Ogden Allied, the company in charge of concessions at UNC. Randy Collins, manager of the UNC branch of Ogden Allied, said that the company used about 700 people from various civil groups to run concession stands for the two games held last weekend.

Some employees ended up working 18-hour shifts in order to get everything ready for both the Pro-Alumni basketball game and the Citadel football game last Saturday, said Collins.

The distance between the Dean E. Smith Center and Kenan Stadium further complicated the already difficult task of preparing for both events at once, he said. Because traffic on campus during the football game was so heavy, many employees had to be let out of Kenan early so that they could arrive at the Smith Center ahead of the fans.

Although exact figures were unavailable, Collins said that sales so far this year are about the same as last year. He estiimated that about 55,000 drinks were sold during the two games — 40,000 of these at Kenan and 15,000 at the Smith Center.

Ogden introduced several new products on Saturday, one of which was a 32-ounce soft drink cup with a handle attached. The drinks, which cost $2 each, turned out to be one of the best-sellers of the day. Ogden sold over 8,000 of these, which ran out long before the games were over.

Another one of the better-selling items was hot dogs. During the course of the two games, around 15,000 were sold.

But not all of the new items introduced sold so well. Stuffed pretzels, which came with four different fillings, sold rather poorly. Collins attributed the lack of sales to the $2 cost and the fact that many fans were not familiar with the product.

Many of the fans who attended the Pro-Alumni game in the Smith Center may have noticed something new at the concession areas. Television monitors displaying the current game action have been installed, saving fans from missing any of the court action while in line.

Council member endorsed for new post

Jonathan B. Howes, Chapel Hill Town Council member, will soon take over a new post, spearheading the work of the North Carolina League of Municipalities.

His presidency will begin in October, and Monday night the council officially threw its support behind the councilman.

Nancy Preston, council member, praised the work of Howes and introduced the resolution which endorsed him for the presidency.

The new position will bring some visibility to Chapel Hill, Howes said, because it is one of the most important local government posts.

"I intend to work with the new executive director to maintain the strength of the league of municipalities," Howes said.

"I intend to take a complex approach tailored to individual municipal needs," he said.

Howes said 1986-87 will be a strategic year because of the federal government's increasing emphasis on state power and because of the upcoming general assembly's decision on the tax structure.

He also plans to examine each of the municipalities' options for revenue before making any decisions, he said.

Howes has served as the first, second and third vice-president for the North Carolina League of Municipalities, as well as the co-chairman for the Revenue Sharing Task Force.

He also acted as a board member and chairman of the Triangle J Council of Government and was on the Board of Directors of the Orange

Water and Sewer Authority.

Howes has been a Town Council member since 1975 and served as mayor pro-tem from 1979 to 1981.

Howes heads the Urban and Regional Studies program at UNC and teaches several political science and city and regional planning classes.

His association with Chapel Hill makes him proud, he said. "I represent a great university," he said. "I represent a town whose very name symbolizes a quality of life and is known throughout the world as a source of academic brilliance."

Biko reading sponsored in Pit

The UNC Anti-Apartheid Support Group will sponsor a dramatic reading from the work of Steven Biko, a Black Consciousness leader, at noon today in the Pit.

The reading is part of an Anti-Apartheid protest effort by colleges nationwide.

graduated to an addiction costing $500 to $600 a day."

In 1983, Helms was arrested on 15 charges of possessing and distributing cocaine. He received two years in prison. Within weeks, he began a work-release program during the day, and soon he was arrested again on a charge of distributing a kilogram of cocaine. About 14 years were added to his sentence. "In nine months, I went from being a free man to facing eight years in prison. My dream to play in the NBA was destroyed."

Bobby Jones, a former UNC standout who retired from the Philadelphia 76ers after 12 seasons, said he had never used drugs, but still suffered by seeing others around him shorten or end their careers because of drug abuse.

"I wondered how I ever made it through 12 seasons because I'm not a great physical specimen," Jones said. "Coming out of college, I was quick and I could jump. But that faded so there were a lot of guys really better than me."

"I'd see guys come to training camp and tear up the gym the first day, but two days later they would start to fade," he said. "I'd hear they would be staying out late and hanging around with questionable people."

"At the end of camp they'd be out in the first cut," Jones said.

Jones said that the world today seems to be concerned only with "keeping up with the Joneses" and seeking relief from the fast pace of life. "We can only meet our needs in God, but we seem to have lost that spiritual tie."

"I have epilepsy, so I've had to take phenobarbital every night for the past eight years," he said. "And it makes me wonder why, if I can live with a depressant every day, why do other people need to take a stimulant?"
