4/The Daily Tar Heel/Monday, September 29, 1986

NFL Football	Washington Seattle	19 14	Minnesota Green Bay	42 7	Kansas City Buffalo	A statement	Philadelphia L.A. Rams	34 20	Atlanta Tampa Bay	(OT)23 20	L.A. Raiders San Diego	17 13
San Francisco 31 Miami 16	Chicago Cincinnati	44 7	Cleveland Detroit	24 21	Pittsburgh Houston		N.Y. Giants New Orleans	20 17	N.Y. Jets Indianapolis		Denver New England	27 20

Women's soccer wins 2

By LAURA GRIMMER Staff Writer

The North Carolina women's soccer team continued its incredible winning streak this weekend as it downed two nationally-ranked teams at Fetzer Field.

UNC has never lost a soccer match at home, and that string continued over the weekend. The Tar Heels have compiled an overall home record of 62-0-2. Need we say "impressive"?

Sunday's 3-0 win against the 10thranked University of Connecticut was the finale of a hot two days for UNC. North Carolina did not score until the first half was almost over - with just 1:45 remaining - when April Heinrichs surprised UConn goalie Bonnie Mitchell with an inside shot. Mitchell already had five stops to her credit when the goal was allowed. According to Huskie head coach Len Tsantiris, however, that first goal was the key.

"We held UNC scoreless for the majority of the half," Tsantiris said, "and then I think fatigue set in. If we could have avoided that first goal,

The second North Carolina goal was scored well into the second half without assist by Jo Boobas with 1:53 left.

we just seemed to really tire out," well against the No. 1 team." The Tar Heels did the same amount of damage to No. 5 Colorado College team Saturday afternoon, taming the Tigers 3-0.

At 26:41 in the first half, Heinrichs put the first North Carolina goal in, assisted by Gebauer and Carrie Serwetnyk. Less than one minute later, Serwetnyk herself scored with assists from Gebauer and Birthe Hegstad.

Thirty minutes into the second half, Serwetnyk scored again off an assist from Marcia McDermott to wrap up the game.

Was the intense heat and the number of resulting substitutions any problem for the North Carolina's head coach Anson Dorrance?

"Even with the number of subs we put in," Dorrance said, "everyone was comfortable. We substitute with a regular pattern so the players are used to coming in and immediately start playing with no awkward transitional stage."

Another aspect of the game was the intense, physical action and the number of fouls called on both teams.

"You often have that type of concentration on the field in a match between ranked teams," Dorrance said. "Also, UConn especially is one of our traditional rivals, and they have some very strong players. You expect that roughness in this type of game."

Hot cross country teams sweep

By BOB YOUNG Assistant Sports Editor

What it was. . . was cross country — the Third Annual Tar Heel Cross Country Invitational, to be formal.

What it was not. . . was cross-country weather.

Cross-country, a sport which was born in the lessthan-tropical climate of Great Britain, is not particularly suited to 90-degree temperatures. There's long distances, lots of bodies and no wimpy water stops like in road racing.

Nevertheless, the UNC men's and women's cross country teams overcame the high temperatures and, for the women, hot competition, to take the team titles at their own meet. It was the women's first title at their home meet, while the men had also won the meet last year.

In the women's 5,000-meter race, the Tar Heels moved out to an early lead, which dissipated as the race wore on. Wake Forest's Sue Vanderwagon managed to pull away from the crowd and win the individual crown with a time of 17:47.4.

The second-place finisher, in somewhat of a surprise, was UNC junior Vicki Verrinder in 17:59.8. She beat out Tar Heel senior Karol Chambers, who was the individual winner in North Carolina's only previous competiton, the Old Dominion Invitational. Chambers finished in third place.

Verinder said afterwards that she wasn't bothered by the heat. "It was hot, but I wasn't concentrating on up with a blazing pace. "I couldn't believe how fast we were going that first mile," said UNC's Eric Landis.

The competitor who survived that early pace best was Jama Aden, who won the individual title, but ran unattached and did not count in the team scoring. His time was 25:41.4.

In second place, competing for George Mason University by way of Somalia, was Ahmed Ismail. Ismail, in case there is the slightest chance his name sounds familiar to you, led the 1984 Olympic marathon in Los Angeles for the first seven miles before falling back in the pack.

The Tar Heels' first finisher, All-American Jim Farmer, placed third with a time of 25:52.0. After the race, Farmer had to be treated for heat exhaustion. It was the second time in his career that he required medical attention after a race, having collapsed at the finish of last year's Duke Invitational.

Perhaps the hottest runner for North Carolina, however, was fourth-place finisher Reggie Harris. The senior from Asheville, who was a consistent fourth or fifth man on last year's ACC champion sqaud, finished 14 seconds behind Farmer as UNC's second man.

"I finally had a decent race," Harris said. "The first one in my college career."

Also scoring for the Tar Heels were Mike Currinder (eighth), Mike McGowan (ninth) and Landis (11th). Their team score of 24 points easily beat George Mason's 53. Georgia Tech (102), Radford (112), Wake Forest

The Apartment People