

Group plans festival of world cultures

By DEBBIE RZASA
Staff Writer

The 9th Annual Cultural Festival of the Association of International Students (AIS) will bring a cross-section of the world's cultures to UNC's Great Hall Saturday.

The festival, which will last from 1 p.m. until 7 p.m., will emphasize the human, rather than political, aspects of the world's cultures. To depoliticize the event, AIS has prohibited the display of any national flags at the festival.

"We're not allowing flags because we don't want it to be a political situation of any kind," said Mona Seth, AIS co-president.

About 50 cultures will be represented by booths, food or native entertainment at the festival. Not just nations will be represented, Seth said, but cultures and regions, such as native Americans and the Middle East.

The other AIS co-president, Allan Gochenour, said, "One of this year's festival's major goals, as in the past, is to provide a place for personal interaction among people of the many cultures that are found on the UNC campus."

Amy Schutz, an AIS member who organized the booths for the festival, said that the group contacted international students at UNC to ask if they would like their country to be represented. "We've got every area of the world represented," she said.

The group wrote letters to 50 or 60 embassies asking for information for the displays. The booths will display posters, native costumes, crafts, slide shows and other general information.

"We're really happy this year because we have a lot of countries that didn't participate last year," Schutz said.

Entertainment will begin at 1 p.m. and continue on the Great Hall stage until 7 p.m. Planned events include a dance by the Carolina Indian Circle members, a performance of Canadian folk music, a Japanese tea ceremony, an East European dance and an exhibition of Korean Tae Kwon Do.

Seth said all the performers will be UNC students or local residents.

International cuisine donated by area restaurants and AIS members will be sold for 50 cents to $1, Seth said.

Although the hours of the festival coincide with Springfest, the all-campus outdoor concert Saturday, Seth said she expects a big turnout. "People from Springfest can wander in whenever they want," she said.

Hall of Fame to induct 6 journalists

By MARK FOLK

Six North Carolina journalists who have made significant contributions to the field of journalism will be inducted into the UNC School of Journalism's Hall of Fame on Sunday.

The new inductees are Margaret Harper, former editor of the State Port Pilot in Southport and longtime leader in the N.C. Press Association; Dr. Neil Luxon, dean emeritus of the UNC School of Journalism; Robert Mason, former editor of the Norfolk Virginian-Pilot; Claude Sitton, editor of the Raleigh News and Observer; Sam Summerlin, president of The New York Times Syndication Sales Corporation; and the late Henry Belk, former editor of the Goldsboro News-Argus.

The School of Journalism instituted the Hall of Fame in 1981 by inducting such well-known journalists as Vermont Royster, former editor of the Wall Street Journal; Pete McKnight, former editor of The Charlotte Observer; and Charles Kuralt of CBS News.

Since then the number of journalists in the Hall of Fame, including this year's inductees, has increased to 35.

The induction ceremonies Sunday will include a 6 p.m. reception in the UNC ballroom, followed by a banquet at 6:30 p.m. in the Carolina Inn. Tickets, available in 100 Howell Hall, are $25 for the public and $12.50 for journalism students.

The Hall of Fame inductions coincide with the start of Journalism Days, an annual two-day series of activities sponsored by the Journalism Alumni and Friends Association and the School of Journalism.

This year's activities, based on the theme "Excellence in Communication," begin on Sunday.

Speeches by three Pulitzer Prize-winning cartoonists on Monday will highlight the planned events. Jeff MacNelly, syndicated cartoonist; Dwane Powell, cartoonist for The News and Observer; and Gene Payne, cartoonist for The Charlotte Observer, will hold a 2-hour discussion entitled "Three Views of Cartooning."

The discussion will be free and open to the public.

Organizers make plans for '88 Symposium

By HELEN JONES
Staff Writer

The 1988 Carolina Symposium, scheduled for spring 1988, will examine the effects of education on cultural development in the United States and Third World countries, according to co-chairwoman Fifi Kashani-Sabet.

The cut in federal aid to U.S. education and the effects of illiteracy are two of the critical issues the symposium will address, Kashani-Sabet said Wednesday.

Organizers are still deep in the planning stage for the program, which will last seven to 10 days.

The symposium, founded in 1927, is held biennially to stimulate campus interest and awareness of social issues through seminars and creative exhibits. It alternates years with the Fine Arts Festival.

Kashani-Sabet stressed the broad nature of the symposium's topic, which will allow participants to explore many interests, from the role of standardized tests to the effects minority education has on societal growth.

One of her ideas for a seminar is having speakers from "Sesame Street" or other Public Broadcasting Service educational programs.

"The purpose of the symposium is to take one topic and develop it from as many angles as we possibly can," Kashani-Sabet said.

The symposium's projected budget will be about $30,000, provided by grants from corporations, UNC departments and Student Government. Organizers will concentrate on fund-raising and program planning in the fall.

The program planners are now seeking students involved on campus who will be seriously committed to the symposium. Experience in organizing programs is preferred but not necessary, Kashani-Sabet said, and diversity among applicants is important.

Kashani-Sabet urged interested students to pick up applications at the Student Union desk.

Decision on pass/fail postponed until fall

By JUSTIN MCGUIRE

The Educational Policy Committee postponed a decision to submit a change in the University's pass/fail policy to the Faculty Council.

The proposed change would allow students who take courses pass/fail to submit target grades for the courses. If they earn the target grades, they would receive that grade; if not, they would receive a "P" or an "F."

Committee Chairman Miles Fletcher said the committee had decided to wait until the fall because some faculty members at Thursday's meeting raised concerns about the proposed change. "Some felt such a system was too generous to students," he said.

The committee wants to see if objections to the proposal are widespread among the faculty, Fletcher said. "We have to think about it some more and sound out more faculty opinion before making a decision."

Previous concerns raised about the proposal, such as whether students would have to set a target grade and what would happen if students surpassed their target grades, will be addressed in the fall, Fletcher said.

"We'll decide whether to make a proposal or not, and if we do, what proposal to make," he said.

Volunteers

a lot. It's a give-and-take kind of thing."

Lin Keeter, a freshman from Winterville, is another student who gives up her spare time to help other students. She is one of 24 students in the UNC sports medical volunteer program.

Keeter volunteers about 15 hours of her time each week helping members of the men's tennis team by wrapping ankles and icing sore leg muscles. Last semester, she worked with members of the UNC track team.

"It's a nice feeling to work here," Keeter said. "It's fulfilling to do this, and really know that you helped out someone who needed it."

If students don't help each other, no one will, according to a member of Students for Educational Access (SEA), a student group formed to help eliminate barriers to equal opportunity education.

"In SEA, we are carrying the banner for all students, not only for students on this campus but for students all across the nation," said SEA member Stuart Hathaway, who is also chairman of the Rules and Judiciary Committee of Student Congress.

"The members of SEA are working not just for those here and now, but for those to come," he said. "If that's not students helping students, I don't know what is."
