spend the afternoon discussing holds used by the World Wrestling Federation. Nothin' happens.

Nothin' nothin' nothin'. I admit, I was trying to get somethin' on the guy, but as far as I see, he was railroaded into quittin' by the Miami Herald nerds. Let's face it, if they are not getting any, they don't want Gary to get any either.

Speaking of private parts, "The Hanoi Hilton" is the flick about American POW's over Nam who, if they did not talk to the guys in black pajamas, got a big ole battery attached to their grocories and then the Cong played "Let's make him twitch like a froggie" with the generator. There aren't a lot of musical comedy tunes in this flick, 'cause Lionel Chetwynd, the director, spent about 10 years talking to prisoners from the real Hanoi Hilton, Hao Lo Prison, where POW's got burr haircuts and ate ratchops for supper.

Michael Moriarty is the Numero Uno American prisoner who gets his teeth kicked in several times for tryin' to act like an American. Basically all we got for two hours is leather straps, Room 18 where a maniac smelly Cuban makes the Americans give him whatever info he wants, and a whole bunch of loudspeaker broadcasts from Ho Chi Hanna or whatever the heck they called her, who spends all day tellin' the Americans how much the Commies love 'em, and a Commie camp commander who walks around sayin', "What we will not win on the battlefield, your journalists will win for us on your very doorstep." In other words, Jane Fonda Fu. The part that really makes you sick is when this "Entertainment Tonight" crew or somebody like Mary Hart comes over there and gets three guys released — the weenie scum informers. And it's like a big deal propaganda victory for the Commies.

Pony up the full five bucks for this one. Only about six dead bodies. Three quarts blood. Two hundred beasts (Commies). No breasts, and you wouldn't wanna see 'em in Hanoi anyhow. Drive-In Academy Award nominations for Michael Moriarty as Williamson, Lawrence Pressman as Cathcart, John Edwin Shaw as Mason, Aki Aleong as the Commie jerk, and Michael Russo as Fidel, the Cuban Commie jerk. Great flick. Four stars.

This week's drive-in video releases:

"The Fly" (1986): Same story as the 1958 version with Vincent Price, only this time the fly is fused with Jeff Goldblum and so we feel sorry for the FLY. Best drive-in makeup effects in history, for Jeff's Cream-of-Wheat cancer face. Winner of two Drive-In Academy Awards. Real disgusting. Four stars.

"Shadow Play" (1986): Worst movie in drive-in history, featuring Dee Wallace as a poet who says the following lines: "The taste of you is on my tongue again, and I will graze till morning." And "I am enthralled to the Muses and they are, by God, calling." Gratuitous Cloris Leachman as the psychic bubblehead mama of Dee's dead lover. Zero stars, and I wish it could be less.

"American Justice" (1986): About some corrupt Tucson cops that round up wetbacks when they come across the border, weed out the pretty Meskin girls, and sell 'em off for pimp bait. Then some TV actors from "Simon and Simon" come to town, watch a skinhead Marine deputy shotgun a Meskin girl in a cactus field, and pretty soon you got vigilantes sprayin' shotgun justice around Nogales. Twelve bodies. Two stars.

"Deadly Friend" (1986): "Breakfast Club" version of "Bride of Frankenstein," about a pretty girl that gets her head bashed in by her slimehead father, but the kid next door has an artificial-brain robot named Bee Bee, so he steals her body, does a little
