

Candidates warned to remove posters

By KATIE BECK
Staff Writer

Candidates eliminated from the race for elected student government positions will be fined for not removing campaign posters before the deadline, said Julie Miller, chair of the Elections Board.

Election bylaws state that "all posters and campaign materials must be removed within 96 hours of the closing of the polls. A fine of $1 per poster will be charged to any candidate in violation." The deadline for removing the posters was 7 p.m. Saturday, Miller said.

The 14-member board has started collecting the remaining posters, Miller said.

Campus Elections

"At this point we don't have a total for each candidate," she said. "We're still in the process of taking them down."

Candidates will be notified about their fines after Spring Break, Miller said. The board is trying to find out who should receive the fines after they are collected.

"We'll continue taking down posters as we find them," she said. "We'll try to go through all the buildings to be fair to all of the candidates."

In past elections the board has overlooked penalizing candidates, but this year's violators will be charged the appropriate fines.

"The purpose is to get them off the walls of the buildings, not to be spiteful," she said. "It's the candidates' responsibility to tell their campaign workers to take them down or to find out where they've been put up."

At last count, the board had removed a maximum of four posters for one candidate.

David Maynard, former student body president candidate, said most of his posters had been removed already.

"A lot of them were ripped down as the day went along," he said. "I did not get anyone to take them down."

Maynard said that he thought that candidates putting up posters for the runoff election had removed a lot of the other candidates' posters.

Brien Lewis, also a former student body president candidate, said he has tried to remove all of his posters.

"I told people during the course of the week to tear down any posters they have seen," Lewis said. "I've gone through every dorm on campus and every other building."

Lewis said he was aware of the poster regulation. "If I'm fined $5 or $10, I won't be ecstatic, but out of 2,500 posters, that's not bad," he said. "It would be impossible, after having put up 2,500 posters, to have all of them down."

New program helps revitalize student groups

"To lead is to serve, to give, to achieve together." This quotation from a brochure distributed by the Office of Leadership Development sums up the goal of the newly organized Leadership Matters Program.

Carol Binzer, a graduate assistant and adviser of the program, said the Leadership Matters Program was designed to provide consulting services and workshops for the more than 250 organizations recognized by the University.

Leadership Matters is comprised of five undergraduate Peer Leadership Consultants (PLCs) and Binzer, who plan its workshops. The PLCs were chosen and trained in the fall, and they bring in specialized outside resources for help.

"We want to help organizations see how effective they can be, how to reach their potentials," Binzer said.

The program offers organizations the opportunity to participate in various workshops on such skill areas as goal setting, publicity, group motivation, communication and stress management.

"On the application for University recognition, we asked organizations to identify which skill areas they would be most interested in improving," Binzer said.

Using information from that survey, the program decided to offer a workshop every other Tuesday night.

Tonight's program will be held at 7 p.m. in Union Room 211. Jody Beasley, Student Congress treasurer, will discuss budgeting, applying for money and fund raising.

Not only does the program offer bi-monthly workshops, the PLCs are willing to go meet with the organizations at any time.

Julie Trotter, a PLC, said, "We really will cater to an organization. If they tell us the time, place and subject, we'll be there to help."

"Organizations cannot lose," she said, "because we tailor-make our workshops for what they want."

On Saturday, March 19, Leadership Matters will hold a conference in the Union from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. The conference, entitled "Motivating Group Members," will include six sessions on such topics as creative leadership and team building.

"With the transition to new officers, that would be the perfect time for groups to utilize us," Trotter said.

Binzer said that organizations did not necessarily have to be experiencing problems to attend a workshop. "There is some stigma associated with needing help," she said. "Officers and members should just come and learn from the other groups."

The workshops are open to all students, not just those associated with a University organization. "We had an athlete who came in and wanted to help unify her team, make them feel more like a team," Binzer said. "Anybody is welcome to use our resources."

A diverse array of organizations, including Student Television, the Nursing Student Association, Lab Theatre and Alpha Phi Omega, has participated. Binzer said all the feedback from the participants has been positive.

Binzer said she hoped that more organizations would take advantage of the service. Each organization receives a monthly newsletter announcing upcoming workshops. But anyone may come to the office and sign up for any of the programs, including the conference, Binzer said.

Students can also apply to become PLCs after Spring Break. The Office of Leadership Development is located in 01 Steele Building.

"Everybody will be a leader at some point in their life," Binzer said. "But leaders are not born, they are made."

Drug policy

regulation of drugs on campus under the Code of Student Conduct.

Under the code, illegal trafficking in the selling or transfer of drugs is punishable by expulsion, suspension or lesser sanctions, and the possession of any illegal drugs on campus is punishable by probation or lesser sanctions.

Calhoun said he doesn't understand why the BOG changed the University's previous policy.

"The previous policy was reasonably effective and better," Calhoun said. "It helped reflect the distinctiveness of different institutions in the system."

There isn't a drug problem at any of the 16 institutions, Calhoun said.

"I feel this (new drug policy) was a political gesture and not focused on campus," Calhoun said. "People were responding to speeches rather than looking for the problem on campus."

The resolution also cites the BOG for not including alcohol abuse in its policy. The resolution states that alcohol is "the most serious form of drug use affecting the University community."

David Whichard, BOG drug policy committee chairman, said alcohol was not included in the policy since it is not considered a major drug.

"The committee was assigned to study major drugs, and we did our job," Whichard said.

body president, said that although the BOG is addressing an obvious problem, the board is putting too much emphasis on punishment.

"It's really good they're giving attention to the drug problem," Bailey said. "But they need to be focusing on educating drug users rather than punishing them."

Bailey said he doesn't mind a system-wide drug policy as long as it doesn't break up the general autonomy of the individual campuses in the system.

"A system-wide drug policy is okay," Bailey said. "But I feel the BOG needs to go back and look at the sanctions that it drew up. I'd like to see a policy that looks at both the individual cases and institutions."

Education

where we needed to focus," Brown said.

The report recommended that the school concentrate on education in kindergarten through 12th grade and eliminate programs dealing with education beyond the secondary level.

After the task force report was issued, faculty members reviewed the report and made suggestions to combine programs slated for elimination with other programs in the school, Harris said.
