Men finish 3rd, women 6th in ACC meet

By MARK ANDERSON

WINSTON-SALEM — The North Carolina men's cross-country team captured third place while the women took sixth at the ACC championships Saturday.

Perfect running weather accented several outstanding performances on Wake Forest's home course. Clemson dominated the men's race for the second straight year, scoring 27 points to Wake Forest's 50. The Tigers were keyed by Dov Kremer and Yehzekel Halifa, who finished together, with Kremer getting the judges' nod as ACC champion. They covered the 8,000-meter course in 24:03, beating teammate Paul McCaffrey, who finished third, by 17 seconds.

N.C. State continued its women's dynasty, winning the meet for the eighth time in its 11 runnings. Maryland's Rosalind Taylor won the 5,000-meter race in 16:36, but the Wolfpack claimed the next three spots en route to scoring 28 points. Clemson was runner-up with 77 points.

North Carolina's men's total of 84 points was good for their third consecutive third-place finish. They accomplished their pre-meet goal of a top-three finish.

"We ran a good race, we just got beat by two very good teams," said head coach Dennis Craddock. "Even if everyone had run personal records, we couldn't have won today."

The Tar Heels were led by senior Mike McGowan. He capped an ACC career that included a sixth-place finish last year by finishing fourth.

McGowan ran most of the race with a three-man pack behind the top three before leaving them behind in the last half mile.

"I wanted to win today," he said, "but those first two have a chance to be in the top five in the nation."

Senior Chuck Lotz continued his brilliant year with a 14th-place finish. He felt it was a good race and hoped he could continue his pleasant trend of consistent improvement.

"I didn't expect to run that fast, but I did expect to finish a little higher," Lotz said. "The field was very fast today."

Craddock once again described senior Paul Cummings' performance as consistent. Cummings ran his best time ever to finish 18th. He has improved every time out this season and attributes it to attacking the mental side of racing.

"Once you realize that running is not the focus of your entire life, you can learn to relax," he said. "It's a 180-degree turn for me from last year."

This year's puzzle has been sophomore Eric Hichman. Last season, Hichman exploded at the ACC meet to finish second, beating runners like Kremer, Halifa and McGowan. He has struggled this year, and although he continued to improve from the beginning of the season, he finished 23rd Saturday.

continue to concentrate and work hard."

The Tar Heels really wanted to avenge last year's loss to Maryland in the NCAA championship game, and on Sunday they did it in style. UNC coach Karen Shelton was understandably pleased with her team's play.

"We played very well in the tournament," she said. "It was a goal of ours at the beginning of the season to win the ACC title, and it's nice to see that the kids' hard work enabled them to obtain one of their goals."

North Carolina upped its record to 17-1, while the Terrapins crashed to 11-7-2. With the tournament title,

"He battled and stayed in the race today," Craddock said of Hichman. "Somewhere along the line he just lost confidence. He's frustrated, but like a baseball player in a slump, he just has to keep going out there and swinging the bat."

Hichman said he is just physically tired.

"I haven't had a break from running since my senior year in high school," he said.

The Tar Heel finishes were rounded out with excellent performances by Vince Howard, Kyle Lowe and Danny Howat. Howard finished 25th, despite battling illness for the past several days. Lowe used an excellent kick to finish 33rd. By capturing 37th, Howat was the ACC's second best seventh man, beating five teams' sixth men.

UNC's women were hoping to finish fourth, improving from last year's ACC basement. Their 117 points gave them sixth, but they were only seven points from fourth. Frustration was magnified by the fact they ran only a fair race by Craddock's estimation.

Craddock has been looking for someone to be a front-runner for the women this year. The lack of this push from the first three runners contributed to the Tar Heels' downfall, as they were the only team not to have a top 10 finisher.

Chrissa Nicholas was frustrated by her 14th place finish, after shooting for the top 10. She felt that the mental part of the race hurt her.

"The first hundred meters was really fast and I kept with the front pack," she said. "Right before the mile, they started to string out and, for some reason, I just let them go."

"I ran 65 seconds better (than the Wake Forest Invitational on the same course), but I didn't race today."

Michelle Faherty was five seconds behind Nicholas in 17th place, while Jamie Newnam turned in an excellent performance to finish 26th. Karen Sahn ran right with her for the 27th slot. Jeanne Peterson and Stacy Montford, normally the team's third and fourth runners, finished 33rd and 35th, respectively. Kari Krehbrink was 46th.

Next year looks even better for the Tar Heel women as they return six of their top seven, losing only Montford. The ACC will have a wealth of talented women next year as only six of the top 30 runners are seniors.

Both of North Carolina's teams will have to run outstanding races at the NCAA Region III Championship Nov. 12, as only the top four teams qualify for the nationals. At the regional, they will face all of the ACC teams along with other quality programs such as Kentucky.

received all-conference accolades: Jennifer Anderson, Leslie Lyness and Tracy Yurgin. All in all, Charlottesville looked more like a North Carolina sports museum this past weekend as the Tar Heels swept the tournament and almost every post-season award that the ACC has to offer.

Pacing the North Carolina attack against Virginia was Blaisse. The Netherlands native got the Tar Heels heading in the right direction as she registered the game's first goal at the 6:36 mark.

North Carolina's second goal came via a penalty stroke, as Spee flipped the penalty stroke by Virginia goalie Liz Nollet. Three minutes later, Blaisse notched her second goal of the game to give the Tar Heels a commanding 3-0 lead.

From staff reports

The latter part of each semester always brings a slew of Tar Heel sports action in and around the ACC, including numerous conference tournaments. But some teams are still playing regular-season matches, and here are the ones from this weekend's road action.

Men's Soccer
UNC-Charlotte scored three unanswered goals in the second half to defeat North Carolina 3-2 on Sunday in Charlotte.

The loss put North Carolina at 11-7-1 on the year, while the 49ers upped their record to 10-2-3.

The Tar Heels led 2-0 in the first 24:24 of the game on goals by Jim Gourlay and Chad Ashton. Gourlay put the Tar Heels up 1-0 at 10:18 when he slammed the ball into the goal with Ashton and Richard Wachsman assisting. Ashton converted a Wachsman pass into a 2-0 lead 14 minutes later, and the Tar Heels went into halftime with a comfortable lead.

UNC had a shot to make it 3-0 at 35:44, but Donald Cogsville, North Carolina's leading scorer, was stopped on a penalty kick. However, the 49ers exploded in the second half with two quick goals by Anthony Richardson to tie the score. Richardson's scores came at 59:17 and 68:42. North Carolina had to play one man short for the final 22:49 as Cogsville was ejected for an altercation with a 49er player.

UNC-C was able to capitalize on the Tar Heels' short-handedness and scored the winning goal at 81:02. F.G. Zwilbauer headed in a free kick rebound to give the 49ers the victory.

UNC-Charlotte outshot UNC 18-14. Forty-niners' goalie Aidon Heaney swatted away seven shots while the Tar Heels' Darren Royer made six saves on the day.

North Carolina will next see action in the ACC Tournament, which begins Thursday at Clemson. Their likely opponent will be the host Tigers on Thursday at 8 p.m.

Volleyball
The Tar Heels kept on rolling this weekend, beating Clemson, Georgia and Georgia Tech on a tough Southern road trip to up their record to 21-6 on the season. The Tar Heels are now a perfect 5-0 in ACC action.

North Carolina began the weekend Friday night with a 15-1, 15-6, 10-15, 15-8 win over conference foe indication. But sooner or later, Rice is going to have to learn to shoot or the Tar Heels' opponents will have one less offensive threat to worry about.

Fox is turning into a very aggressive force to be reckoned with. Fox, Chilcutt and Williams each rewarded the sparse crowd with thunderous dunks, but Fox outdunked everyone with about four rafter-shakers.

"I really want to crash the boards more this year and become more of an offensive threat," Fox said. About half of Fox's rebounds came on plays where he simply muscled the ball away from a surprised teammate. The way things look, Fox could fill in quite nicely in the role that Reid has held so long: the enforcer.

But Fox isn't the only hard-hitting player. Steve Bucknall showed a little of that prowess as well, but in a less-than-sportsmanlike way.

With 14:27 left in the second half, Davis picked up a loose ball and broke to the basket, timing his steps in preparation of a dunk. Bucknall showed more hustle than he has in the past three years to stop him.

Bucknall met Davis at about the foul line and proceeded to basically tackle him. The Dean Dome filled with boos as Davis good-naturedly jumped up and smiled. It's safe to say that Smith had something to say about that little defensive maneuver.

So, surprisingly enough, nothing earth-shattering came out of the only Blue-White game of the year. It's just too early to tell what lies ahead. Smith says the team will be going with a faster-paced offense that will shoot more often this year.

The way things looked on Saturday, a Reid-less North Carolina team is going to have to clean up its offensive act if it is to survive this year.

UNC's next match will be a showdown in Carmichael Auditorium against N.C. State Tuesday night.

Men's Golf
The UNC men's golf team was also triumphant this weekend, copping the 15-team Sea Scape Collegiate Golf Tournament on Saturday. North Carolina, paced by sophomore Tee Burton, captured the title with a 582 score, well ahead of second-place Maryland at 590.

Burton shot a 139 to win the individual championship, his first collegiate victory.
