Sorting out the details of the football shakeup

io: In the aftermath of the departure b of UNC football's Disgruntled Dozen, the natural follow-up quesotion is this: What does it all mean? 16 On the surface, the whole situation would seem to be no big deal. That's certainly how Mack Brown and his coaching staff are treating last week's "mass exodus."

Val Sure, they point out, the Tar Heels lost 12 scholarship players who were respected to be on next year's roster, but only three or four of the departees would have played a great deal. Moreover, they maintain, seven of the H2 were potential fifth-year seniors who, after redshirting as freshmen, simply decided to graduate on time with their class rather than linger on campus for a fourth year of athletic glory.

To hear Brown tell it, Dan Vooletich, Victor Bullock, Chuck Sledge, Bill Franklin, Richard Applebaum, -Phillip Cheek and Steve Lowe represent what college athletics are supposed to be all about. They stayed with the team for four years and now, confronted with the reality that an NFL career will never be theirs, are prepared to get started in the job -hunt.

to give up their scholarships. Instead, they claim, the wear and tear of this year's 1-10 football season, combined with a desire to get on with life in the "real world," compelled them to end their playing careers.

As for the other five who quit, well, as Brown will unfailingly remind you, there's not a college football team in the country where every player is pleased with his playing time. Those who watch from the sidelines think they deserve an on-field chance, while those who play some think they deserve a spot in the starting lineup.

Thinking along these lines are Brian Vooletich (Dan's younger brother), Brad Smith, Jay Palmisano, Dave Wolfe and Freddy Renken. The first three would have been stuck in the backfield once again behind such standouts as Kennard Martin, Torin Dorn, Aaron Staples and the bullish Michael Benefield. Playing time would have been scarce for them next year, anyway.

Brown has not seemed particularly concerned about the walk-outs, calling the whole situation normal for a program in transition.

"There's usually a high turnover ratio in a transition situation," he said Tuesday. "It usually happens right when you come in. We were lucky we have not had many young people leave. But when you change the offense, change the defense, change the personalities of every coach who recruited these young people, it's hard for them."

Indeed, therein may lie the rub. Aside from the group of Tar Heels who were first-timers in Chapel Hill last year, the rest of the team was recruited by former UNC coach Dick Crum. The one-year changeover was quite drastic, to say the least.

Crum, now the head man at Kent State, believed in running the football down opposing team's throats. When this philosophy worked, as it did early in his tenure at UNC, no one complained. When it failed, as it did in the latter part of his decade at the helm, he was called too conservative.

Last December Brown succeeded Crum and immediately began promising a more exciting brand of football. Why, the Tar Heel offense even installed the option as part of its attack. And on defense, UNC was playing more man-to-man than ever, moving the "speed" guys ahead of the slow afoot on the depth chart.

But overhauling an entire football team's philosophy can take time, as evidenced by the Tar Heels' lousy start. By the middle of the season, Brown had given in to tradition, changing back to the power game, running off tackle until it hurt and tasting considerably more success playing Crum-ball.

"That's what everyone here was recruited for," Wolfe said. "The offensive line had been working on the same blocking schemes for years. Then (line) coach (Monk) Tomlinson came in and changed some things around, and it took them a little longer to get used to than I think the coaching staff expected."

Despite the new staff's remarkable enthusiasm from the start. Wolfe said he sensed that there might be some problems adjusting to an entirely net style of football.

"(Speed) is one of their big things Wolfe said. "Some guys are powe coaches. These guys are quickness and speed coaches. The old coache used to run right at you. These guy want to run around you."

But did Brown and his staff give blood-and-guts players like Dan Vooletich the run-around this fall? After all, the one common denominator among all 12 players would seem to be a lack of pure speed.

"I think you've got to have speed guys on every team," Brian Vooletich said. "But I think effort can make up for a lack of speed. There's no doubt about that. If you're a tad slow, but you're a smart player and give good effort, you can play.

"My brother's a prime example of that. Dan's not the fastest guy in the world, but he knows where he has to be and he can make up for that by being football smart. There's definitely a difference between speed and quickness."

So, too, is there a difference between a full-scale mutiny and a minor skirmish.

UNC shooting fast, winning big sans J.R.

The J.R. Reid-less Tar Heel basketball squad is sitting on a 7-1 record going into Saturday's game in Greensboro against the Richmond Spiders. That fast start has surprised, among others, the UNC coach himself.

"I'm ecstatic about the record; I mean, I never dreamed we'd be this way, even with J.R.," Dean Smith Eric Wagnon Staff Writer the first eight games.

Smith harped on the point in the preseason that his team would "turn it up a notch" and take the first good shot available. One statistic seems to bear Smith's claim out: Last year, North Carolina's early-season North Carolina took a shot once every 44 seconds, while this year's squad has attempted a shot every 36 seconds . . .

for the game. Vanderbilt connected on 33 shots, and nearly a fourth of that total came from slamming home eight rim-rattlers.

UNC forward Kevin Madden responded with three slams of his own, while Scott Williams dunked off an assist from Lebo and Steve Bucknall took the ball coast to coast on a steal and jam

Senior guard Jeff Lebo is trying to make the most of his last year as a Tar Heel. In UNC's first game against Tennessee-Chattanooga, Lebo secured a place in the record books with 17 assists.

Smith plans to use the versatile 4 Madden inside even after Re returns to the lineup.

"We planned to have Madden fro last April to go back to the frontline Smith said. "We have three from court positions and two backcourt so he'll just stay up there in th frontcourt.

"With J.R. (Reid), we didn't real post (Madden) up. But we made that decision last summer, we aren't going to just look for J.R. like we did last year, so that's why when (Reid) was injured, we didn't have to make any wholesale changes" said after Wednesday night's win over Vanderbilt.

performance is even more impressive when one considers the strength of the Tar Heel schedule - only two of the eight games thus far have been against opponents who did not participate in last year's NCAA Tournament.

Furthermore, those two non-NCAA participants, Georgia and Stanford, are not the patsies like Coppin State, Hofstra, or Maryland-Eastern Shore that populate other ACC teams' non-conference slates

North Carolina's new faster-paced offense has been the subject of numerous newspaper columns and barber shop discussions. This new style may be stirring up some excitement among UNC fans, but the statistical impact on UNC's offensive punch is minimal. North Carolina's offense is producing an average of 91 points a game, while last year's team tallied 87.5 points an outing through

Although he was concerned about his team's shot selection, Smith praised the team's performance on the defensive end of the floor, saying this year's more experienced team is continuing the progress made in the second half of last year.

"The defense was the turning point," Smith said following the Vanderbilt victory. "Thank heavens we've had defense the last two games. Against Missouri, we were shooting 40 percent and still win big because of our defense"

Vanderbilt could manage to even attempt only a single baseline jumper until Commodore center Frank Kornet's dunk finally lit up the visiting side of the scoreboard with 16:31 left.

Kornet's slam set off a dunk-fest

Currently at 1,299 career points, Lebo, out of Carlisle, Pa., has moved into 19th place on North Carolina's all-time scoring list, surpassing fellow Pennsylvanian George Karl's total of 1,293 points.

Lebo's 25-point outing against Vanderbilt, which positioned Lebo ahead of Karl, was his third 20-point performance this season - including a career-high 29 against Indiana . . .

Along with Lebo's offensive production. Madden has emerged as an inside offensive threat - leading the Tar Heels this year in scoring, with 19 points per game. As a sophomore playing primarily at the big guard position, Madden, of Staunton, Va., averaged just 8.6 points a game.

Madden has picked up some of the scoring slack left by Reid's injury, but

DTH Picks of the Week

If you think we're going to open this thing up by writing some cute thing about Christmas, think again. We'll just ignore that holiday here, because everybody else in this paper will be talking about it (and our editor has a serious case of the bahhumbugs).

This is it, this makes them or breaks them - you know who they are, the fearless foursome. After more than three months of peerless prognostication, the championship of DTH pigskin picking all comes down to the season-ending bowl blitz.

As we head into this bowl extravaganza, Mike (I'm not angry, just tired, dammit!) Berardino leads Andy (To Catch A Thief) Podolsky by just one game. Of course, with 17 bowl games, Dave (I'm not cocky, just confident) Glenn and Chris (Kringle) Spencer, who could spend his New Year's Day in New Orleans, can still sneak in there.

Berardino, a remarkable talent who has been atop the standings all year long, is looking for an unprecedented second DTH title in three years, while the upstart Podolsky is trying to derail The Boss' Championship Express

Negotiations end; Padres sign Hurst

From Associated Press reports

ATLANTA - Bruce Hurst took geography over money Thursday when the free agent left-hander signed a three-year, $5.25 million deal with the San Diego Padres.

"For me and my family, San Diego was the place we wanted to go," Hurst said in a conference call.

The signing ended an intense megabuck battle with California and North Carolina's fast start could be attributed in part to a schedule which places the Tar Heels on a neutral court or the floor of the Smith Center for their first 10 games.

However, the atmosphere has been slightly different in the Smith Center this year. Traditionally, every home game draws a capacity crowd of 21,444, but this season's average attendance is only 13,832. This average was adversely affected by the two Big Apple NIT games - not included in the season-ticket package or student distribution — which left over half the Smith Center's seats empty.
