Ai Christmas, children sit down, make a list of things they want and give it to Old Saint Nick. But adults also should get the chance to make their Christmas wishes known to the old guy.

So here is the Chapel Hill Christmas list, especially for students and community members to read and help come true. That is, if Santa Claus doesn't answer every one of them first.

Mayor Jonathan Howes said if his one Christmas wish would come true, he would be extremely happy. "I hope we have a year in 1989 that will be harmonious and get us off to a good start on the bicentennial celebration of the University and town."

UNC head basketball coach Dean Smith has a short but enlightening wish for everyone. "I wish that we all could realize that happiness comes as a by-product of helping others," he said.

Mike Roberts, UNC head baseball coach, said, "I wish that all the people who are fortunate enough to work at UNC enjoy their job as much as I enjoy mine." He also hopes for a successful baseball season in 1989. In addition to these two special Christmas wishes, he said he would like to see a lot of people attend a baseball clinic at the Omni Europa Hotel on Saturday, Dec. 17 from 8:30 a.m. until 1 p.m. The clinic will feature former UNC baseball players Scott Bankhead, Scott Bradley, B.J. Surhoff and the American League's 1988 rookie-of-the-year Walt Weiss.

Student Body President Kevin Martin said "For Christmas, I am anxious to have a whole stack of witty Stuart Hathaway columns." And, "I want North Campus parking along with lower-level seats for basketball games for all students."

Kenneth Perry, BSM president, said he has a very long Christmas list. "Another girlfriend, some money, a trip to New York, a new paint job and new tires for my motorcycle and insurance for my car." But above all, Perry said he wishes for a date and site for a new Black Cultural Center.

"My Christmas wish is that the housing department will accept RHA's counter-proposal for changes in the lottery process," said Jimmy Randolph, RHA president. He added, "I also would like a Babe Ruth rookie card."

Chris Kridler, Phoenix editor, said she is going to her home in Pennsylvania for the holidays and would like to see a white Christmas. She also wishes, "Santa would send the Phoenix a million dollars so we could publish a national, glossy magazine."

Student activist Dale McKinley said, "I wish for there to be justice served here, as well as in South Africa." He hopes there will be an increase in justice and equality, so there will be less suffering. He also said, "I wish that everybody would have a joyous time of Christmas."

CAA President Carol Geer wants students to vote yes in February for the Student Recreational Center. And she has an additional Christmas wish that most students would like to see come true. "I want the basketball team to win the NCAA basketball championship because it's my last year at UNC."

Jean Lutes, Daily Tar Heel editor, has a wish for a flawless paper. "I wish we could put out a paper that was perfect," she said. "One with perfect headlines, perfect stories, perfect pictures and perfect editorials. And one in which every piece of information would be accurate, interesting and relevant to students."

Well, there's the Chapel Hill Christmas list, just ready and waiting to be fulfilled by Kris Kringle on Dec. 25 or, if need be, to be answered thereafter by UNC students, faculty, administration and the Chapel Hill community. Merry Christmas!

Feeling generous? Christmas gift ideas for the extravagant

By CHERYL ALLEN

Most students run short on funds during the holiday season. But for those of you who have a bulging billfold, a healthy checking account or a large credit limit, the market contains a myriad of gift choices this year.

Local jewelers claim that gold and diamonds are the most expensive Christmas gifts they are selling. The larger gold chains and colored-stone rings are selling well this year, according to Nancy Tomkovic, owner of the Gold Connection. Both sell for well over $200.

Many husbands are buying their wives designer jewelry ranging from $1,000 to $5,000 at Minata Jewelers, according to store owner Linda Kornberg.

If diamonds aren't your best friends and warm, fuzzy live things are, the Pet-Go-Round offers a variety of unusual pets for Christmas presents. Store manager James Butler said many people are buying ferrets priced at $89.99. And for the snake charmer in your life, you can purchase a Ball Python at the same price.

Know someone lonely who needs someone to talk to? Prices for parrots range from $499 to $899. Pet-Go-Round has sold four of our feathered friends this season, Butler said. But if you are buying for traditional types, and dogs are their best friends, you might want to purchase the $899 Rottweiler. Pet-Go-Round has sold one so far this season.

Maybe you want to steal away with your sweetheart or just send him or her away sometime. You can purchase a 10-day cruise to a warmer climate for between $1,700 and $2,500, according to Margaret Johnson, a travel agent for AAA World Travel Agency. Popular spots include the Bahamas, Mexico and the western Caribbean. The agency also offers short-stay vacations to Europe, upwards from $399, that are selling well this year, she said.

If you can't get away to get a real tan, just bring one home. In-home tanning beds are selling well, said Rick Pierce, owner of UVA Sun System Inc. "Usually the wife makes her husband buy it for her," he said. "Every year we sell quite a few." The full beds with top and bottom tanning bulbs cost between $2,000 and $3,000.

At the Sun Shop, you can buy $200 worth of tanning sessions (40 visits) to give as a present, according to manager Brian Holt.

Need to relax after stressful exams? A spa or hot tub in your dorm room might do the trick. The average cost for a spa is $4,000, according to Doug Pollet, president of Catalina Spas and Leisure Products. The store sells more spas around Christmas time, he said. Hot tubs are made of wood, and spas are their manmade counterparts.

Slipping out of a hot tub and into a mink may be the way to go. Mink coats are still one of the most expensive gifts for Christmas. According to Janet Serotta of Serotta's Inc., the mink jackets cost between $5,000 and $6,000. The full length coats are more expensive.

Well, it's nice to dream, but as the Christmas season looms closer, don't despair. Mom will probably wear that Carolina sweatshirt far more than a fur coat, and your little sister will love a puppy from the pound just as much as a Rottweiler.
