

Today: cloudy,
highs in upper 40s
40% chance of rain,
around 60 on Wednesday

Condoms for sale
in the Pit — page 5

Be someone's secret
admirer — page 7

Parking Forum
6:30 p.m.
in the Great Hall

The Daily Tar Heel

Serving the students and the University community since 1893

Volume 96, Issue 118

Monday, February 13, 1989

Chapel Hill, North Carolina

News/Sports/Arts 962-0245
Business/Advertising 962-1163

N.C. State allegations discussed

By JAMES BURROUGHS
Staff Writer

The commission appointed to investigate allegations of corruption in the N.C. State University basketball program has met three times, said C.D. Spangler, UNC-system president, at a meeting Friday of the Board of Governors (BOG).

"We can be assured, I am certain, that this process will move along with dispatch," Spangler said. "This is what I recommended, and this is what we're doing now."

Samuel Poole, BOG vice chairman and member of the commission, said the committee has not found any incriminating evidence, but the investigation will continue.

"We have before us somewhere over 3,000 documents that we're reviewing, and I envision that number will double," Poole said.

The State Bureau of Investigation will join the committee in the investigation, Spangler said.

The SBI will not conduct its own investigation, but rather it will be an arm of the commission, Poole said.

"They (SBI) work for the commission. They report to us. They do not make any judgmental decisions," he said.

The first press accounts of "Personal Foul," a book by Peter Golenbock alleging improprieties in the NCSU basketball program, appeared on Jan. 7 and were followed by NCSU Chancellor Bruce Poulton's requesting both an NCAA and NCSU investigation, Spangler said. When the allegations continued, Spangler appointed the special commission to investigate, he said.

Also at Friday's BOG meeting, the board remembered Albert Coates, former UNC law professor and founder of the Institute of Government. In the presence of his widow, Gladys Coates, board member Philip Carson read a tribute to Coates, who regularly attended BOG meetings

At Friday's BOG meeting, the board remembered Albert Coates, former UNC law professor and founder of the Institute of Government. In the presence of his widow, Gladys Coates, board member Philip Carson read a tribute to Coates, who regularly attended BOG meetings

See BOARD page 2

RHA candidates stress need for communication

By AMY WAJDA
Staff Writer

Candidates for Residence Hall Association president discussed improved communication with the housing department and guaranteed sophomore housing at an RHA-sponsored election forum Sunday night.

David Smith and Liz Jackson were the candidates who appeared at the forum at the Morehead Cellar in Cobb Residence Hall.

Bad communication with the Elections '89

Parking proposals opposed at forum

By WILL SPEARS
Staff Writer

Students, faculty and staff contested recommendations made by the chancellor's ad hoc committee on parking at a forum Friday, including one that would require students to pay $2 to park on campus at night.

The forum, held in Old Clinic Auditorium, allowed about 85 students, faculty and staff to voice their opinions on the draft of the chancellor's ad hoc committee's parking proposal.

The committee will consider the suggestions made at the forum before drafting a final proposal to present to Chancellor Paul Hardin, who attended the forum, said Gene Swecker, associate vice chancellor for facilities management.

Dennis O'Connor, University provost; Wayne Jones, acting vice chancellor of business and finance; and Garland Hershey, vice chancellor of health affairs, all members of the ad hoc committee, also attended the forum.

The committee recommended that students be allotted 350 fewer parking spaces in 1989-1990, and that student government assign the student spaces.

The committee also recommended a $2 charge for parking on campus after 5 p.m. Faculty and staff members with parking permits would be allowed to park for free.

Swecker, who conducted the forum, explained the committee's recommendations. "These are still draft recommendations," he said. "... We're still seeking your input."

Junior Brien Lewis, an executive assistant to Student Body

President Kevin Martin, said the $2 evening parking charge would be unfair to students who wish to drive to the library at night, he said.

"I don't have a car," he said. "I never have. In fact, I don't even have a driver's license.... But there's no way that people should have to pay to use resources they should have free access to."

Randy Brown, a graduate student in computer science, suggested the sale of an evening parking permit to graduate students who must use labs on a nightly basis.

Students cannot afford to lose 350 parking spaces because they have a definite need for them, Lewis said.

"Our life is not simply living in dorms and going to classes," he said. "There's a whole world out there. We have jobs and we need cars. Just because we're students we shouldn't be denied spaces."

North Carolina Memorial Hospital has far too little parking, said Bobby McFarling, plant maintenance supervisor. "It's a terrible mistake for the hospital to get so large with so little parking," he said.

The lack of parking spaces creates a problem for workers on 24-hour call, and many potential employees are discouraged because they are not able to buy a parking permit, McFarling said.

"We need a little more consideration as employees than we have been given to this point," he said.

Students need to be included more in the University's planning processes, said junior Trey Loughran, also an executive assistant to

See PARKING page 2

President Kevin Martin, said the $2 evening parking charge would be unfair to students who wish to drive to the library at night, he said.

"I don't have a car," he said. "I never have. In fact, I don't even have a driver's license.... But there's no way that people should have to pay to use resources they should have free access to."

Randy Brown, a graduate student in computer science, suggested the sale of an evening parking permit to graduate students who must use labs on a nightly basis.

Students cannot afford to lose 350 parking spaces because they have a definite need for them, Lewis said.

"Our life is not simply living in dorms and going to classes," he said. "There's a whole world out there. We have jobs and we need cars. Just because we're students we shouldn't be denied spaces."

North Carolina Memorial Hospital has far too little parking, said Bobby McFarling, plant maintenance supervisor. "It's a terrible mistake for the hospital to get so large with so little parking," he said.

The lack of parking spaces creates a problem for workers on 24-hour call, and many potential employees are discouraged because they are not able to buy a parking permit, McFarling said.

"We need a little more consideration as employees than we have been given to this point," he said.

Students need to be included more in the University's planning processes, said junior Trey Loughran, also an executive assistant to

See PARKING page 2

President Kevin Martin, said the $2 evening parking charge would be unfair to students who wish to drive to the library at night, he said.

"I don't have a car," he said. "I never have. In fact, I don't even have a driver's license.... But there's no way that people should have to pay to use resources they should have free access to."

Randy Brown, a graduate student in computer science, suggested the sale of an evening parking permit to graduate students who must use labs on a nightly basis.

Students cannot afford to lose 350 parking spaces because they have a definite need for them, Lewis said.

"Our life is not simply living in dorms and going to classes," he said. "There's a whole world out there. We have jobs and we need cars. Just because we're students we shouldn't be denied spaces."

North Carolina Memorial Hospital has far too little parking, said Bobby McFarling, plant maintenance supervisor. "It's a terrible mistake for the hospital to get so large with so little parking," he said.

The lack of parking spaces creates a problem for workers on 24-hour call, and many potential employees are discouraged because they are not able to buy a parking permit, McFarling said.

"We need a little more consideration as employees than we have been given to this point," he said.

Students need to be included more in the University's planning processes, said junior Trey Loughran, also an executive assistant to

See PARKING page 2

President Kevin Martin, said the $2 evening parking charge would be unfair to students who wish to drive to the library at night, he said.

"I don't have a car," he said. "I never have. In fact, I don't even have a driver's license.... But there's no way that people should have to pay to use resources they should have free access to."

Randy Brown, a graduate student in computer science, suggested the sale of an evening parking permit to graduate students who must use labs on a nightly basis.

Students cannot afford to lose 350 parking spaces because they have a definite need for them, Lewis said.

"Our life is not simply living in dorms and going to classes," he said. "There's a whole world out there. We have jobs and we need cars. Just because we're students we shouldn't be denied spaces."

North Carolina Memorial Hospital has far too little parking, said Bobby McFarling, plant maintenance supervisor. "It's a terrible mistake for the hospital to get so large with so little parking," he said.

The lack of parking spaces creates a problem for workers on 24-hour call, and many potential employees are discouraged because they are not able to buy a parking permit, McFarling said.

"We need a little more consideration as employees than we have been given to this point," he said.

Students need to be included more in the University's planning processes, said junior Trey Loughran, also an executive assistant to

See PARKING page 2

President Kevin Martin, said the $2 evening parking charge would be unfair to students who wish to drive to the library at night, he said.

"I don't have a car," he said. "I never have. In fact, I don't even have a driver's license.... But there's no way that people should have to pay to use resources they should have free access to."

Randy Brown, a graduate student in computer science, suggested the sale of an evening parking permit to graduate students who must use labs on a nightly basis.

Students cannot afford to lose 350 parking spaces because they have a definite need for them, Lewis said.

"Our life is not simply living in dorms and going to classes," he said. "There's a whole world out there. We have jobs and we need cars. Just because we're students we shouldn't be denied spaces."

North Carolina Memorial Hospital has far too little parking, said Bobby McFarling, plant maintenance supervisor. "It's a terrible mistake for the hospital to get so large with so little parking," he said.

The lack of parking spaces creates a problem for workers on 24-hour call, and many potential employees are discouraged because they are not able to buy a parking permit, McFarling said.

"We need a little more consideration as employees than we have been given to this point," he said.

Students need to be included more in the University's planning processes, said junior Trey Loughran, also an executive assistant to

See PARKING page 2

President Kevin Martin, said the $2 evening parking charge would be unfair to students who wish to drive to the library at night, he said.

"I don't have a car," he said. "I never have. In fact, I don't even have a driver's license.... But there's no way that people should have to pay to use resources they should have free access to."

Randy Brown, a graduate student in computer science, suggested the sale of an evening parking permit to graduate students who must use labs on a nightly basis.

Students cannot afford to lose 350 parking spaces because they have a definite need for them, Lewis said.

"Our life is not simply living in dorms and going to classes," he said. "There's a whole world out there. We have jobs and we need cars. Just because we're students we shouldn't be denied spaces."

North Carolina Memorial Hospital has far too little parking, said Bobby McFarling, plant maintenance supervisor. "It's a terrible mistake for the hospital to get so large with so little parking," he said.

The lack of parking spaces creates a problem for workers on 24-hour call, and many potential employees are discouraged because they are not able to buy a parking permit, McFarling said.

"We need a little more consideration as employees than we have been given to this point," he said.

Students need to be included more in the University's planning processes, said junior Trey Loughran, also an executive assistant to

See PARKING page 2

President Kevin Martin, said the $2 evening parking charge would be unfair to students who wish to drive to the library at night, he said.

"I don't have a car," he said. "I never have. In fact, I don't even have a driver's license.... But there's no way that people should have to pay to use resources they should have free access to."

Randy Brown, a graduate student in computer science, suggested the sale of an evening parking permit to graduate students who must use labs on a nightly basis.

Students cannot afford to lose 350 parking spaces because they have a definite need for them, Lewis said.

"Our life is not simply living in dorms and going to classes," he said. "There's a whole world out there. We have jobs and we need cars. Just because we're students we shouldn't be denied spaces."

North Carolina Memorial Hospital has far too little parking, said Bobby McFarling, plant maintenance supervisor. "It's a terrible mistake for the hospital to get so large with so little parking," he said.

The lack of parking spaces creates a problem for workers on 24-hour call, and many potential employees are discouraged because they are not able to buy a parking permit, McFarling said.

"We need a little more consideration as employees than we have been given to this point," he said.

Students need to be included more in the University's planning processes, said junior Trey Loughran, also an executive assistant to

See PARKING page 2

President Kevin Martin, said the $2 evening parking charge would be unfair to students who wish to drive to the library at night, he said.

"I don't have a car," he said. "I never have. In fact, I don't even have a driver's license.... But there's no way that people should have to pay to use resources they should have free access to."

Randy Brown, a graduate student in computer science, suggested the sale of an evening parking permit to graduate students who must use labs on a nightly basis.

Students cannot afford to lose 350 parking spaces because they have a definite need for them, Lewis said.

"Our life is not simply living in dorms and going to classes," he said. "There's a whole world out there. We have jobs and we need cars. Just because we're students we shouldn't be denied spaces."

North Carolina Memorial Hospital has far too little parking, said Bobby McFarling, plant maintenance supervisor. "It's a terrible mistake for the hospital to get so large with so little parking," he said.

The lack of parking spaces creates a problem for workers on 24-hour call, and many potential employees are discouraged because they are not able to buy a parking permit, McFarling said.

"We need a little more consideration as employees than we have been given to this point," he said.

Students need to be included more in the University's planning processes, said junior Trey Loughran, also an executive assistant to

See PARKING page 2

President Kevin Martin, said the $2 evening parking charge would be unfair to students who wish to drive to the library at night, he said.

"I don't have a car," he said. "I never have. In fact, I don't even have a driver's license.... But there's no way that people should have to pay to use resources they should have free access to."

Randy Brown, a graduate student in computer science, suggested the sale of an evening parking permit to graduate students who must use labs on a nightly basis.

Students cannot afford to lose 350 parking spaces because they have a definite need for them, Lewis said.

"Our life is not simply living in dorms and going to classes," he said. "There's a whole world out there. We have jobs and we need cars. Just because we're students we shouldn't be denied spaces."

North Carolina Memorial Hospital has far too little parking, said Bobby McFarling, plant maintenance supervisor. "It's a terrible mistake for the hospital to get so large with so little parking," he said.</p