

Publisher refuses to print controversial 'Personal Fouls'

The manuscript that has caused so much controversy and investigation at North Carolina State University will not be published, according to sources at Simon and Schuster's Pocket Books.

"'Personal Fouls,' by Peter Golenbock, did not meet the publishing standards established at Pocket Books," said an official spokesperson at Pocket Books. "Therefore, Pocket Books will not proceed with publication of the book."

The spokesperson declined any additional comment, including speculation whether the book would be published by any other house at any time.

NCSU head basketball coach Jim Valvano said in a prepared statement that he was very pleased with the decision. "Now I am hoping to turn my full attention and energies to the players of the North Carolina State basketball team and to the people involved in the operation of our department of athletics," he concluded.

The manuscript was supposed to have contained evidence of corruption at NCSU, and rumors were fueled in January when the Raleigh News and Observer obtained a dust jacket from the book, even though Pocket Books denied that any books have been run off the presses.

A commission, which included members of the Board of Governors and the State Bureau of Investigation, was formed soon after that. The commission has collected some 3,000 documents so far.

NCSU Chancellor Bruce Poulton held a press conference at 3 p.m. Wednesday. He read a prepared statement and answered questions from the press, and a spokesperson said that one issue Poulton discussed was the continued National College Athletic Association's investigations. "The NCAA was on campus at our request," Poulton said at the conference.

Al Lanier, NCSU's vice chancellor for university relations, said that he was pleased that Simon and Schuster had come to the decision. "We thought all along that these allegations were unfounded," he said in a telephone interview. "The real losers are the people of North Carolina."

Lanier added that the next move on NCSU and Valvano's part is questionable. "There's certainly a possibility for legal action."

Symposium to focus on role of gender, race in education

By LESLIE WILSON

A campuswide symposium on "Class, Gender, Race and Graduate Education" will be held Feb. 24 and 25 in Murphey Hall.

The symposium will feature two keynote speakers: Dr. Barbara Sizemore, who will address "Curriculum, Race and Class: from Kindergarten through Graduate School," and Dr. Anne Fausto-Sterling, who will speak on "Gender and Race: Diversity in Graduate Education."

The first session will begin at 4 p.m. Friday, and Sizemore's address will begin at 4:15 p.m. The program on Saturday will begin at 8:30 a.m., with Fausto-Sterling's address beginning at 9 a.m. The symposium is free.

Fausto-Sterling's address on Saturday will be followed by workshops on how class, gender and race affect graduate and professional relationships through the specific topics of institutional policy, curriculum, faculty-student relationships and graduate students as teachers.

The symposium, which is being sponsored by the Alliance of Black Graduate and Professional Students, the Graduate Feminist Alliance and the Graduate and Professional Student Federation (GPSF), will close with a reception from 4:30 to 7 p.m. at the Black Cultural Center.

Symposium coordinator Dennis Moore said the GPSF decided there was a need for a symposium on the roles of class, gender and race in graduate education after it held a program last year on graduate education and professionalization.

"In the course of the discussion, it became evident that the role of class, gender and race in this context was a source of anxiety and misunderstanding," Moore said in the symposium's pamphlet. "Clearly, open communication on these sensitive issues is essential if our University is to produce graduates whose treatment of class, gender and race in their professional lives will be based on more than good intentions."

The symposium is open to faculty and students and will encourage ideas on this topic that specifically relate to the University, Moore said.

Carrboro business group reorganizes

By L.D. CURLE

Carrboro business and property owners are coming together to communicate and to make an impact on local policy, according to a member of the new Carrboro Business Association.

The association will meet quarterly and will discuss issues such as the proposed special district tax for downtown Chapel Hill and Carrboro, said Gary Phillips of Weaver Street Realty.

The first meeting was five minutes of business and five hours of socializing, and that was good, Phillips said. One of the main purposes of the first meeting was for some of the old businesses to get to know some of the new ones.

A Carrboro Business Association has operated in the past, Phillips said. But the group that used this name stopped meeting about three years ago. With the permission of those who were involved, the new group is using the same name, he said.

"Carrboro is a very vibrant small town," Phillips said. "It's time for us to get together and talk."

Johanna Snyder of Snyder Galleries said the group is informally surveying Carrboro business people to see how they feel about the special district tax and the Public-Private Partnership. The association will make its results available to the town.

A lot has happened in Carrboro in the past three years, said Snyder, who helped initiate the group along with Phillips. "I felt a need for organization," she said.

One of the needs the association will meet is welcoming new businesses into the community, she said.

Carrboro Mayor Eleanor Kinnaid said the business community has to have a lobbying arm to express its needs and problems. If the town doesn't become involved, there will be no solutions, she said.

Scott Bertram, of Townsend, Bertram and Company, said, "I like the fact that it's informal." No one takes minutes or pounds a hammer at the meetings, he said.
