

THE COMICAL

Local big-hair to give graduation speech in May

By I.V. Reject

Wire Service Paraphraser

Jon Bon Jovi, teen-idol and big-hair rock star, will be the 1989 commencement speaker, spewed Dook Student Body and Jovi Fan Club President Tomas Semen, who is from Pissquataway, N.J., in a press conference Thursday.

"Jon, I can use his first name because I started the fan club, is the perfect speaker for the Dook graduation. I mean, he is from Sayreville, N.J., which is like a shrine in The Garden State, and because most of us are from Joisey, we will be able to understand his accent anyway. Right now, I am so happy and Living On A Prayer," Semen spurted. Soon after the announcement, thousands of Dookie co-eds rushed to the Durham Revco to purchase Ronco Hair Crimpers. "We want to like tease our hair because that is like the way all Joisey girls like wear their hair and also because Jon is like so sexy and smart that like he must know how hair should like be worn," slanged Tina Tran-quilli, who is from Ramapo, N.J.

"I can't wait for the speech. We are all going to scream like so loud. He is soooooo cute, I just love his butt. Oops, don't print that because I don't want my mom, who lives in Secaucus, N.J., you know — where all the outlets are — to read it," spat Gina Petrocelli, who like her mom is from Secaucus.

Bon Jovi and his hair were reached for comment in Asbury Park, which is on the Joisey shore for you out-of-state readers, where they was hanging with Southside Johnny and the Boss.

"Hey Dookies, I'll Be There For You because You Were Born To Be My Baby," said Jovi, who likes to talk and sing in cliches. "Lay Your Hands On Me, I am Wanted Dead or Alive because I am a Runaway. The theme of my commencement jingle, I mean speech, will be Love is a Social Disease so you should stay In and Out of Love."

One person not pleased with the graduation speaker was tobackey aress Doris Dook, who is not from New Joisey, obviously. Dook recently adopted 35-year-old flower child and free-love advocate Moonbeam Heiffer, who also is not from New

See Jonnie page 12

Fairy, Queen share hair care and Vaseline

By Emma Ture

Seniors Danny Fairy and Queen Snyder certainly are a fun pair. Whether it's hanging out in their room sharing a good laugh about Alaa Abdelnaby's grade point average or trying to pick up girls on Chapel Hill's Franklin Street, those two are always having a blast.

Said Fairy of his roommate and best pal, "He's the main reason I chose not to go pro last year. Well, besides the fact that those big guys in the NBA might hurt me. My relationship with Queen is certainly a special one."

Queen agrees that he doesn't know what he'd do without Fairy. "Danny-boy is always there in my time of need. Like when I didn't get the part of Peter Pan in the school play, Danny said he knew I'd never grow up, and he really made me feel better. And when I ran out of mousse last week, he lent me his jar of Vaseline which he always keeps handy under his bed."

"When I ran out of mousse last week, he lent me his jar of Vaseline which he always keeps handy under his bed."

--Queen Snyder

"I have the utmost respect for Danny-boy," Queen continued. "He has something that I just haven't been able to find in my career at Dook: basketball talent."

But these two studs are more than just good people — they're team leaders. Just ask Christian Laettner, the freshman responsible for losing the Arizona game and making the ACC look bad. "Danny-boy and Queen took me aside after that game and told me not to worry about it and enjoy the moment. They said that next year, once they're gone, Dook may never again be close to beating a decent team. I've decided to live for the moment, never to look back, keep my head up and keep reaching for the stars. Ever since that conversation, I've been a new man!" Laettner cried with jubilation.

In their free time, Queen and Fairy love to road-trip to Chapel Hill to look at good-looking girls. "Sometimes on weekends, a few real girls come to Dook to visit. But normally, when we want something more than a 4'10", 160-lb. biophysics major from Newark, Carolina's the place to go. Ooooh, they're sooo hot," Fairy moaned.

Asked of their plans upon graduation, Queen and Fairy became solemn. "I'll go on to play in the NBA for Daddy's Washington Bullets, and Queen plans to pursue a bodybuilding and hair styling career back in his hometown of Mercedes Island, Wa. It'll definitely take some getting used to — not seeing his boyish face when I wake up every morning," Fairy lamented.

Jon Bon Jovi says, "Lay your hands on me."

Queen, Dookies sport cellophane unitards