Westerns may make TV comeback

From Associated Press reports
PASADENA, Calif. — Westerns may be out of fashion on the screen, but the rip-snorting frontier saga "Lonesome Dove" was expected to win Sunday night's showdown at the Emmy Awards.

The CBS miniseries that starred Robert Duvall and Tommy Lee Jones scored the highest number of Emmy nominations in non-technical categories — 18, followed by NBC's frequent winner "L.A. Law" with 17, and ABC's miniseries "War and Remembrance" with 15.

Also expected to make a strong showing in the three-hour Fox Broadcasting telecast was ABC's "The Wonder Years" with 14 nominations; ABC's "thirtysomething" with 13; and NBC's "The Golden Girls" and Fox's "The Tracey Ullman Show" with 10 nominations each.

"Lonesome Dove" was a big winner even before Sunday night's event, taking six Emmys in technical categories in non-televised ceremonies Saturday night.

Before the success of "Lonesome Dove," the Western had been largely moribund for well over a decade on both the big and small screen. This fall will mark the first time in 15 years that two Westerns have been on the network schedule — CBS' "Paradise," in its second year, and the new show "The Young Riders" on ABC. In 1958-59, by contrast, the top four shows were all Westerns: "Gunsmoke," "Wagon Train," "Have Gun, Will Travel" and "The Rifleman."

Sunday night's spectacle at the Pasadena Civic Auditorium, highlighted by a tribute to the late Lucille Ball, marked the end of a three-year contract between the Television Academy and newcomer Fox. The 1987 show was a ratings disaster. Last year's Nielsen showed improvement but still embarrassed academy officials.

"This year should be much better," predicted John Moffit, co-executive producer of the Emmycast.
