

Giant squirrel materializes on high school football field

From Associated Press Reports
WAKERTOWN, Pa.—Police can't find the owner of a 4-foot fiberglass squirrel that appeared on a football field, but they suspect the animal is a fugitive from a miniature golf course. The hollow figure dubbed Squinky showed up Monday on the 50-yard line of a school playing field. Police and school officials figure it was a prank, but they can't find anyone to claim the squirrel. Police have been calling miniature golf courses to no avail. The search for Squinky's owner continued Wednesday. "I've got a lot of squirrels in my barn, but none that are pre-fabricated," said James Beerer, a high school principal. "If there's no takers, I'm willing to adopt the squirrel."

All for the sake of art
CINCINNATI — With a flip of a stripe, an artist accidentally turned the West German flag into the Belgian flag on 31,000 T-shirts, mugs and other souvenirs for Cincinnati's Oktoberfest. "This could be an international incident," Cincinnati City Council member David Mann said Tuesday. The graphic artist hired by organizers of the festival held Sept. 16-17 said he moved a vertical red stripe from the middle to the right side of the German flag to keep the color from blending with the event's red logo. The resulting black-orange-red combination is the Belgian flag.

Kelly Pharmed of Decatur, Ill., who came to Cincinnati to visit friends, noticed the problem and wrote the City Council.

"It's one thing to mess around with words, but not a country's flag."

Hill

because On The Hill's business leveled off and then fell beginning three weeks ago. She said fewer people came to On the Hill as the music became more unrecognizable and the clientele became more "alternative."

"What we have intended to do is back down on some of the alternative music and go back to more mainstream music," Brown said. She said she wanted to pull in a "mainstream college crowd." This middle-of-the-road crowd includes members of fraternities and sororities and typical college people whose patronage is vital to Chapel Hill businesses, she said.

"There are so many of them (in town); that's who you have to target." A former regular at the bar who asked not to be named said On the Hill would lose even more business if it changed its musical format. "The only reason people were going was the music."

Brown stressed that the change was made for business reasons only. "It's not a personal decision."

Russ, who described herself as a regular at the bar, said the bar started doing poor business only after it began charging a higher cover than in the summer. The cover drove away the "mainstream" crowd who have a choice of many bars in town, she said.

Library

"It's a membership organization, and what we try to do is communicate with alumni and friends, as well as students and faculty, and bring them to a greater awareness of the library's needs."

The group helps raise money for the University's endowment to the libraries through membership dues and donations received through promotion of the organization, Fletcher said. The money raised will not replace money needed from the state, but it might help smooth things out a little, she said.
