Dreyfuss

tivities Board and Carolina Union, in a UNC baseball cap with a Domino's Pizza and no planned speech.

"I've had a hard goddamn day," he said as the crowd applauded him. "I am an actor. I was arrested for drugs. I will answer anything honestly."

The first questions from the audience regarded his participation in such political activities as the Campus Freedom of Choice Tour, where he spoke Friday. Dreyfuss said he did not feel any obligations as a celebrity to be involved in politics. "It is only as citizen that I feel any obligation to be politically active."

When asked what it was like to be a celebrated actor, Dreyfuss said, "It's better than having tetanus."

He said his acting career formed a perfect circle. "I love what I do, I can do what I love, and I'm paid for it. But it is sad that you can never be in a bad mood in public."

Acting has been Dreyfuss' companion since he was 9 years old, he said. "I grew up with acting as a companion. It's the only way I could explain my love affair with my work." Until he was 30, he never took a day off except for two weeks, he said.

But acting does not occupy the same place in his life that it once held, Dreyfuss said. "That love affair ended years ago, and right now I'm unsure. I might wake up with a revived love affair with acting, or I might wake up and walk away."

In advising new actors, he said practice was the key to success. "If you want to be an actor, you act. The more you act, the better you get."

Dreyfuss said his most difficult movies were "Jaws" and "Inserts," an X-rated movie he made during the
