

Trustees narrow list of candidates for new N.C. State chancellor

From Associated Press reports
 RALEIGH — North Carolina State University (NCU) trustees have trimmed the list of candidates for the chancellor's job to three finalists, with the names to be handed to University of North Carolina President C.D. Spangler this week.

Trustees on Saturday accepted two names from a search committee that had waded through more than 200 applications. The board then added one more name and agreed to hand-deliver the names to Spangler on Monday.

Officials declined to identify those on the list or to say whether interim Chancellor Larry Monteith was on it. Monteith, a former engineering dean, had been among the search committee's top five choices for the job. Others in that group, according to The (Raleigh)

News and Observer, were Ronald Beller, president of East Tennessee State University, and Francis Lawrence, academic vice president and provost at Tulane University in New Orleans. Monteith has had strong support among NCSU faculty, but he has been sharply criticized by supporters of former basketball coach Jim Valvano. The former coach's most vocal supporters have threatened to withhold donations to the university to protest the handling of his dismissal. Valvano's contract was bought out after 15 months of controversy over poor academic performance among basketball players, an NCAA probation over players' missing complimentary tickets and basketball shoes and allegations of point-shaving by former team members.

Earth Week

undertook his own Earth Week project. He created a resolution stating that Winston, Connor and Alexander residence halls were opposed to any development in that area that would threaten the landscape.

"This is our backyard. We don't want development here. There's no way to stop development if the University decides to do it, but I'm hoping that this will make them think before they do." The HRC officers and the three residence hall presidents signed the proclamation. Brittain sent copies to Chancellor Paul Hardin, Director of University Housing Wayne Kuncel, the Campus Y and HRC Area Director Leslie Foster.

The resolution will not only make administrators aware of students' concerns but also will express support for Campus Y and its efforts, Brittain said.

Other area governors have expressed an interest in making similar statements.

Scott Peeler, Granville Towers governor, said that he supported Brittain's proclamation, but that it would not be feasible for him to issue a similar one.

"It's different at Granville, because we're privately owned. It wouldn't have the same impact."

Scheduled events for Earth Week on campus met with mixed success, organizers said.

Students constructed a rain forest display in front of the Carolina Student's Credit Union office in the Student Union on Tuesday. The display was designed remain open, though S4-permit holders will have to approach the lot from South Road instead of from Ridge Road.

The department will place barricades at the Ridge Road entrance to Stadium Drive and at the west end of I Lot to block through traffic. When construction ends for the day, at around 5 p.m., the barricades will be opened to permit motorists to pass during the evening.

Depending on the schedule of the trucks and the amount of traffic, the department might open Stadium Drive to inform students of the rain forest destruction rate, Clotfelter said.

The location of the display, however, created problems for the CSCU.

The Union gave Earth Week organizers permission to keep the display until Thursday, but the CSCU asked that the display be taken down after Wednesday, Clotfelter said.

Lee Newcomb, general manager of the CSCU, said, "It did interfere with our members conducting business with our office. Potted plants were directly in front of our teller window, and it was difficult to get to the office door. Also, their music was quite loud in the office, and it distracted our employees."

Clotfelter said one of the most successful events was tree-planting. The total number of trees planted in a variety of off-campus locations should reach 5,000 by the end of this week, he said.

"It was a good way for students to get involved. It's not very skilled labor, and it's fun."

A benefit dance held at Magdalena's La Terraza Thursday night drew a large crowd. "It was a full house. We appreciate the people at WXYC for helping us out with that," Clotfelter said.

from the University.

"That was basically what we asked," Bowler said. "We were given everything we asked for in our grievance."

Devitto declined comment on employee personnel matters.

Edwards said the police department was working on the promotion policy, but they had already promoted everyone they preferred. "They have gotten everybody who they want promoted," she said.

Bowler said Devitto had been open to suggestions from officers on the subject of promotion policy revision. "He wanted to get all the officer input he could, which I thought was great," Bowler said.

Devitto said he had put three drafts of his promotion policy proposal before staff officers. He wants to publish the policy, putting it into effect by the first of May, he said.

"That's my target. I'm trying to turn this thing around. I'm gonna be there."

One of the leads finally paid off." She said she could not reveal the nature of the lead.

Police allege that Morgan, who is a painter for Morgan Paint Company, climbed through an apartment window about 11:30 p.m. the night of the crime.

The woman told police she was sleeping when a white man with black hair, a large build and pot belly broke into the apartment. She reported that the man raped and sexually assaulted her and then escaped through the window.

Because the man did not use a weapon in the assault, Morgan is not being charged with first-degree rape.

punitive and administrative processes were carried out.

"I think it's a marvelous effort. You know what you like, but to put it down in words is difficult," he said. "Congress is really going to go into the possible ramifications of things."

Shelburne said he hoped congress wouldn't try to rush the code through to ratification. "We need to take some more time with it. I don't know if congress is ready to deal with this yet, but we definitely should discuss it now, because we need to be sure to get the seniors' input before they graduate."

Student Congress Speaker Matt Heyd said the full congress would consider the proposed code Wednesday night, once it gets through the Rules and Judiciary Committee. "It's possible that it might be ratified Wednesday night. I know that's what the Elections Board wants, but it will depend on how comfortable congress feels about it," he said.

and allow through traffic during the day, Garrett said Sunday. "We'll call our shots as the day develops. We might let traffic through, but at this point we're planning on no through-traffic."

The University will offer alternate parking spaces during the three-day period, Garrett said. The I zone permit will be honored in the Rams Head parking lot, the L and S5 zones along Ridge Road and any F Lot except the one behind the Smith Center.

Chapel Hill buses will also accommodate the construction, taking detours for routes A, P, U and the L late-night shuttle.
