Oil tanker fire almost under control

From Associated Press reports

GALVESTON, Texas—Firefighters on Tuesday boarded a burning super-tanker and began gaining control of a fierce blaze that has left the oil-laden vessel crippled and leaking in the Gulf of Mexico, officials said.

A thick cloud of gray smoke surrounded the superstructure of the 886-foot Mega Borg, replacing the balls of flame and towering columns of black smoke that had been billowing from the Norwegian vessel since an engine-room explosion Saturday.

"The fire situation has improved," Coast Guard Capt. Thomas Greene said. "It's cooler and you can see this by the gray smoke. The fire in the pump room is out."

"At this point, I'm encouraged by the progress that's been made. We're still not out of the woods yet, and I'm not going to sleep well yet until it improves more. There's still potential for major problems from (an oil) release."

The Coast Guard also revised its estimate of the amount of oil on the water to less than 2,000 gallons, a fraction of the 100,000 gallons officials estimated earlier. The amount that had spilled from the tanker, which was carrying 38 million gallons of light African crude, was not determined.

Crewmen boarded the tanker to determine if it had cooled enough to be sprayed with flame-smothering chemical foam. Foam spraying has been delayed since Monday because the ship was too hot and crews feared an explosion even if the flames were doused.

Officials said it could take as little as an hour to pump the foam into the engine room and other burning areas.

"We're hoping the foam application is a success," said Coast Guard Petty Officer Howard Holmes. If not, "we can't deny the fact that we could be in trouble, but we are optimistic that the foam will work."

Crews on Tuesday aimed 10 water streams from five fireboats stationed at the sides of the tanker, and firefighters had placed another water hose on the deck, pointed at the burning stern.

"They've kept applying water in great quantities and it's continued to cool the structure," Greene said. "They'll continue to do that. There's progress being made. They're making ground."

Efforts to dissipate an oil leak apparently also were having some success. The oil slick around the ship diminished to 13 miles by five miles, Petty Officer Gene Maestas said. Most of what remained appeared in a light sheen with few heavy concentrations.

The ship is 57 miles southeast of Galveston. The spilled oil is not expected to reach the coastline immediately.

"We're still not completely safe from a major release until the fire is out and the ship is stabilized and it's brought on an even keel," Greene said.

Once the fire was extinguished, ships were ready to begin transferring the rest of the Mega Borg's cargo. Greene said the operation could be dangerous because the ship is listing slightly, and crews might have to pump water into the holds to keep the vessel balanced.

Jury selection in 'wilding' case begins

From Associated Press reports

NEW YORK — Jury selection begins Wednesday in the trial of three teen-agers accused of raping and beating a Central Park jogger — a case that relies mainly on what the defendants told police about each other.

The first hurdle will be finding 12 jurors who haven't made up their mind about the "wilding" case, which has received vast amounts of attention from New York newspapers, radio and television stations.

About 500 people will form the first pool from which lawyers will try to pick a dozen jurors and six alternates. The jury will hear the cases against Antron McCray and Yusef Salaam, both 16, and Raymond Santana, 15.

They and three other youths are charged with attacking an investment banker while she was jogging through the northern end of Central Park shortly before 10 p.m. on April 19, 1989.

According to authorities, a pack of more than 30 youths had entered the north end of the park together for what they called wilding, a violent rampage through the park. Eventually, splitting up into smaller groups, they allegedly attacked two male joggers, a homeless man, and the female jogger, who was gang-raped and left for dead.

On Tuesday, Justice Thomas Galligan decided against allowing audio-visual coverage of the trial, including live television. He cited the "lewd and scandalous matters" to be dealt with, witnesses' apprehensions, the ages of the defendants and the opposition of prosecution and defense.

The victim, now 29, suffered brain damage and has said she cannot remember the attack or identify her assailants.

After what doctors called a near-miraculous recovery, she returned to work at Salomon Brothers, where she recently became a vice president.

Assistant District Attorney Elizabeth Lederer has not said whether she will call the victim to testify.

Defense lawyers have said her presence would add nothing material to the case and would only prejudice the jury against their clients. The lawyers also say they will oppose introduction of photographs taken of the jogger right after the attack.

The three youths are being tried as adults on charges of attempted murder, rape, sodomy, sexual abuse, assault, robbery and riot. But if convicted they would be sentenced as juveniles and would face a maximum of three and one-third to 10 years in prison.

Lawyers expect it will be impossible to find jurors who have not heard of the case. Jurors will be asked to promise that they can reach a fair verdict despite what they may have heard before trial.

Probably the most important development was Galligan's decision to admit as evidence the written and videotaped statements the youths gave police and prosecutors soon after their arrests.

In the statements, some of the teen-agers incriminate themselves and most of them incriminate one or more of their companions. Defense lawyers fought to suppress the statements, charging that they were coerced with threats, intimidation and lies.

Without the statements, defense lawyers said after Galligan's ruling, the prosecution would have had no case.
