History

The memo stated, "... we are likely to lose about 20 TA and RA positions as well as some part-time instructorships.... As of now all I can say is that we will be cutting some positions and that most of our TAs will probably be used as graders rather than receptors."

Cell was out of town Tuesday.. Cindy Hahamovich, a history graduate student, said the cuts would have a profound effect on the department and the quality of classes taught. "With no hands-on education, no discussion, you might as well be in high school.. It would be devastating."

One-third of the TA positions would be cut, she said. Behrends said lapsed salary money had become an important part of the department's salaries. "When faculty members leave the University, the salary money goes back to the dean, and then a share of the money comes back to the department," he said.

Because of budget cuts, a larger part of this lapsed salary money is used now for University needs, he said.

Stephen Birdsall, associate dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, said every department faced cuts in lapsed salary money. The projected figures for lapsed salary money were included in budgets issued by the College of Arts and Sciences to each department for the 1991-1992 school year, he said.

Classes

Arts and Sciences is losing about one third of its lapsed salary funding, he said. Certain undergraduate curricula, including women's studies and public policy analysis, are losing about 70 percent, he said.

Gillian Cell, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, was out of town Tuesday.

Stephen Birdsall, associate dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, said a meeting was held Thursday between Cell and all faculty chairmen and chairwomen to discuss the impact of possible budget cuts for the upcoming school year.

"This year, because the budget picture for 1991-92 does not look good at all, we decided to have a meeting to talk about the reductions that were likely to be necessary to have realistic budgets for next year," Birdsall said.

The departments have not responded yet, so the number of class sections that will be eliminated is not yet known, Birdsall said.

Lawrence Gilbert, chairman of the biology department, said between five and eight biology sections would be cut if the budget problem did not improve.

"There will be about 300 students who will not be able to take general biology," Gilbert said. "Majors may not teaching positions lost by each department will vary and will be based on several factors, including the department's other monetary resources, previous spending patterns, and teaching responsibilities, he said.

Joseph Flora, English department chairman, said keeping teaching assistants would be an important priority for the English department.

be able to get their classes in time for graduation. It is getting worse. Next year looks like it may be the worst time ever."

David Galinsky, psychology department chairman, said about 12 psychology sections would be cut for both the fall and the spring.

Charles Briscoe, physics and astronomy assistant chairman, said his department was trying to find alternatives to section cuts, such as combining classes.

case depends on the individual."

Carl Fox, the district attorney for Orange and Chatham counties, said now that Smith has been federally indicted, the state may drop its charges.

"The likelihood is that the common law robbery charges will be dropped," he said.

Crime

center desk drawer, Perry said. If people lock valuables in a file cabinet, usually they put the key in their desk, often on the right hand side, Perry said.

"That's the kind of thing we want people to look out for," Perry said.

Students and administrators should lock all valuables in a safe area and make sure the keys are not in an accessible place, Perry said.

Lt. Barry Thompson of the Chapel Hill Police Department said he did not know of any recent thefts involving stolen checkbooks and check cashing.

Larry Ellis, crime prevention officer at N.C. State, said one similar incident had been reported there. In that incident, checks were stolen out of a pocketbook and cashed. The police department is working with the bank to investigate the report.

Detective Charles Nordan of the Duke University Police Department said there had been no change recently in the number of thefts on campus. Wallets and checkbooks are occasionally stolen at Duke, but nothing unusual has occurred lately, he said.

Richardson said the delay between Smith's arrest and the charges made by the FBI can be attributed to the court system.

"The grand jury doesn't meet every week," he said. Tuesday was the first day the Smith case could be heard since his arrest, Richardson said.

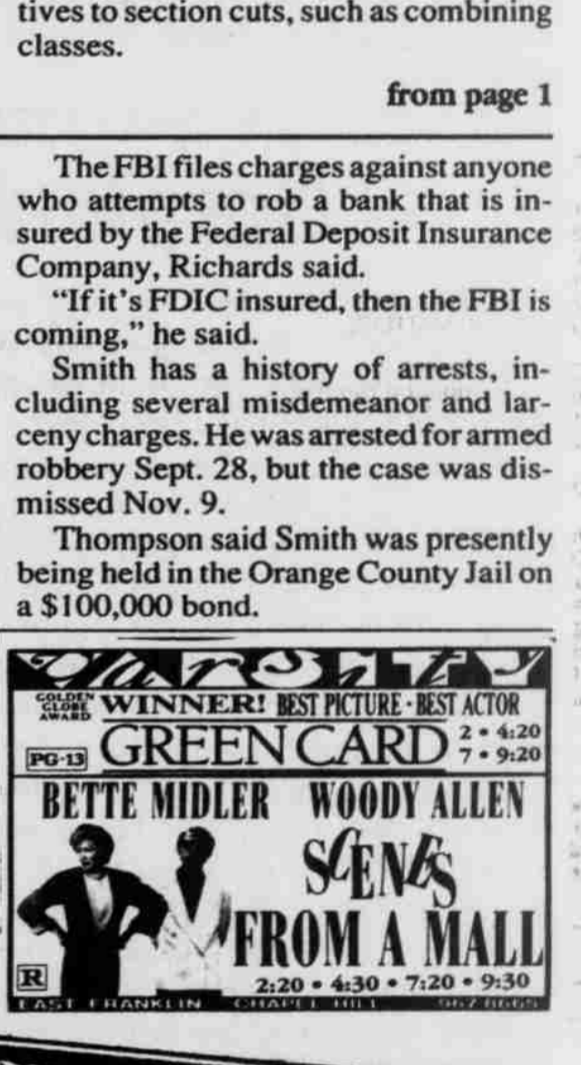

The FBI files charges against anyone who attempts to rob a bank that is insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Company, Richardson said.

"If it's FDIC insured, then the FBI is coming," he said.

Smith has a history of arrests, including several misdemeanor and larceny charges. He was arrested for armed robbery Sept. 28, but the case was dismissed Nov. 9.

Thompson said Smith was presently being held in the Orange County Jail on a $100,000 bond.
