Howes said discrimination was not a factor in the attempted raid of a Chapel Hill home last Friday during which police, attempting to make a drug bust, mistakenly raided the wrong apartment.

"The fact is we made a mistake," he said. "Our police are working with neighboring jurisdictions on the whole drug situation. Sometimes things don't work.

"We have apologized to the innocent family, but that doesn't take away from the fact that it was done at a great deal of embarrassment and physical cost to the family," Howes said. "Imprinted in the mind of the 6-year-old boy, who I'm sure has seen a lot in his time, is going to be the picture of police entering his home and taking his parents. It was not handled well."

Despite incidents such as last Friday's troubles, Howes said Chapel Hill's growing crime problem is being addressed as best it can.

"I'm sorry to say that Chapel Hill is a more dangerous place to live than it was in the past, just as Durham is, just as Fayetteville is, just as Charlotte is, and unfortunately, just as many small towns are becoming," Howes said.

The police are trying to curb violence about the life and history of Saratov while touring the city and socializing with its officials, Howes said. The trip would have been the first exchange of its kind between the cities.

The Saratov officials plan to visit Chapel Hill and Carrboro after the mayors visit Saratov.

Howes, Kinnaird and Spruyt planned to meet with UNC professor Don Raleigh, a Sovietologist and expert on Saratov, who is in Saratov conducting research. Raleigh was to act as interpreter and facilitator during the visit.

Howes said the jubilation in Russia about recent changes also is disrupting Raleigh's work.

will never be passed. The proposed entertainment tax in Chapel Hill would raise the prices of tickets at Kenan Stadium and Smith

Students have generally objected, assuming that the weight of the tax would somehow fall onto their ticket prices, probably through increased student fees, Howes said. "My sense is that as long as the University opposes it, it's not going to be a very lively issue," he said.

While the town council has lobbied the General Assembly for several years in an attempt to gain certain taxing powers, Howes said more powerful interest groups, such as UNC, will continue to thwart these efforts. Chapel Hill government services currently are financed by the annual property tax.

The recent proposition by Intimate Bookshop owner Wallace Kuralt to turn Franklin Street into a pedestrian mall has its merits and may be worked into the city plan someday, Howes said.

Street be altered to make it more pedestrian and more user-friendly," Howes said. "It's an intriguing idea. Because Franklin Street is a state road, however, any changes in the Franklin Street area must first be approved by the N.C. Department of Trans-While a similar plan was approved in Hendersonville, any changes to the downtown area of Chapel Hill will take some time. 'We're going to use (Kuralt's plan) as a basis for opening up a big discussion about the atmosphere downtown," Howes said. "The town council is willing to make some moves to make the whole environment more pleasant."

Although his term ends in January, Howes is excited about the November elections. The mayoral race should be

Tommy Gardner. The mayor also expects to see several close races for town council seats, noting that one UNC student, Mark Chilton, is running. Howes encouraged support for Chilton but cautioned potential UNC voters not to vote for fel-students. Howes also encouraged students to get involved in the November municipal elections, noting that "nobody has a bigger stake in this than you students."

Jennifer Wilkes, chairwoman of the UNC Young Democrats, agreed and hopes to get other students, not just members of the Young Democrats, interested in the fall elections.

'Students don't realize that while they're taking from the community, they also need to give back some support, she said. "Student organizations need to make community issues a focal point. Maybe more publicity can get students interested in the elections and in what's going on around Chapel Hill."
