Hemingway returns in 'Civil Wars'

The Associated Press

Marjorie Hemingway wants to start acting her age.

She gets the chance on ABC's "Civil Wars," playing Sydney Guilford, a successful Manhattan divorce lawyer whose personal life is a shambles.

The Wednesday night show from Steven Bochco Productions, which brought you "L.A. Law," is the 30-year-old actress's first television series after a movie career of less mature roles.

"This helps me to change my image and get out there as an adult," Hemingway said. "I think many people, particularly producers and directors, had put me in a time warp and thought of me only as the girl in 'Manhattan' or 'Personal Best' or 'Star 80.' I've done a lot since then ... but I don't think the message got out — plus, I took a lot of time out to have children. What better opportunity to let people know I've grown up than in a quality television series?"

"Civil Wars" also stars Peter Onorati, last seen as the bad cop in another Bochco show, "Cop Rock." He becomes Sydney's new associate after her first partner suffers a nervous breakdown because of overwork.

At first, Hemingway said she resisted reading the pilot script because she didn't want to do a series. But when her agent persuaded her to read it, she said, the writing was so good that she immediately met with the producers.

"You think — divorce lawyers — it's going to be the divorce of the week," Hemingway said. "But it's really fascinating. You deal with how people fall in love, then why they fall out of love. What happens is that divorce causes a tremendous upheaval in your life. People you think you know suddenly do surprising things. Sydney examines these people, but it hasn't helped her own personal life."

One of the things she likes about her character is that she isn't perfect.

"She'd be a bore to play if she was," Hemingway said. "I think the fact that she can be successful on one side and unsuccessful in her personal life makes it interesting. A lot of career women
