DTH editor

Toll said one of their main changes in minority coverage would be in the DTH editorial board, which presently is all white.

"How can that board sit down and say 'Hmm, I wonder what a black female would feel like in this situation?'" Toll said. "They shouldn't have to do that. They should turn to the black female who is not there to represent her entire sex and her entire race, but who's there to represent herself."

The editorial board presently is limited to DTH staff members who have written for at least one year. There are four men and three women on the board.

Peter Wallsten said he would open the edit board to the public to diversify the board.

"I do plan to open up the editorial board for applications from anyone," he said. "I will keep a very open mind with full intentions of diversifying it."

Matthew Easley said he did not feel comfortable opening the editorial board to the public, but said he would work to keep minorities on the staff so they could move up to the editorial board.

"We've had too many (minorities) come and leave," he said. "The problem is folks come into the paper and they're there for awhile, but they don't feel welcome. I can understand this, because we have white men who come in and work for us and they don't feel very welcome."

Stephanie Johnston said the atmosphere of the DTH office was a factor in the low percentage of minorities on the staff and the editorial board.

"It takes making the office environment friendly and keeping people on for awhile so they gain experience so they can move up in the ranks, so to speak," she said.

BSM members also questioned the factual accuracy of DTH reporting of past events, such as Homecoming queen selection last fall.

Toll said as co-editors she and Bounds would have time to get out and become familiar with different campus groups and their leaders.

Easley said he would hold mandatory workshops on writing and interviewing for writers to make stories more complete and accurate.

Johnston said she would work on communication between The Daily Tar Heel and campus groups to reduce the number of factual errors in stories.

Wallsten said he planned to reduce errors in the DTH by requiring more aggressive reporting and requiring reporters to become better acquainted with the groups they cover.

RHA president

Epps said the BSM chose to endorse Streeter rather than Jennifer Davis because of his executive experience. "They were both saying the same thing, but Streeter has more experience," he said. "That's what separated them."

CAA president

Epps said Kirincich was impressive because of her experience in CAA leadership positions. "She had concrete plans for Cross-Cultural Night and definite plans for changing the Homecoming queen selection process."

Another one of her goals is to expand Homecoming activities, she said.

"Homecoming is probably where the majority of our budget goes," she said. "We're talking about expanding Cross-Cultural Night and moving the day of the movie in the Pit."

CAA members coordinate Homecoming events, which run from the Sunday before the Homecoming game to the big event Saturday. Annual activities include Cross-Cultural Night, Franklin Street Extravaganza and the pep rally.

Kirincich also said she wanted to continue encouraging other groups to participate in Homecoming.

"We've always solicited other groups to work with CAA," she said.

The Student Recreation Center is another concern for Kirincich. The SRC, which will house an aerobics area, a weight-training area and the Wellness Resource Center, is scheduled to open in February 1993.

Kirincich said she was one of the few people qualified to deal with SRC issues. "This year I'm chairing up the policies committee," she said. "We're going to be looking at student and faculty use."

The SRC will be funded by student fees, but it may also be opened to faculty members for a fee. "But I don't see that as a problem," she said.

She also said she hoped to increase support for non-revenue sports and open CAA Cabinet positions to different groups of people.

"I've worked for diversity in the Cabinet basically through direct solicitation of organizations like the Panhellenic Council, the Inter-Fraternity Council, the Black Student Movement and the Campus Y," she said.

"I've worked with them throughout the year, and they've been helpful. So I thought, 'Why not go back and see if they've developed an interest in the Cabinet?'" she said.

Kirincich is running unopposed.

Tar Heel swimmers prep for ACCs with pair of Pirate pummelings

Staff report

GREENVILLE — The North Carolina men's and women's swim teams cruised past East Carolina Tuesday night at Minges Natatorium in their final tuneup before the ACC Championships.

The 21st-ranked men's team prevailed 118-90 to move its record to 8-2. The No. 13 women's squad romped 140-65 to stay unbeaten at 11-0.

The Tar Heel men were keyed by sophomores Khari Milner and Josh Thomson. Milner took the 100-yard butterfly with a time of 52.99 seconds and was on the 200 medley relay team with Thomson that took first in 1:38.32.

Thomson also won the 100 backstroke in 55.16.

The UNC women put in a dominating performance, winning 12 of 13 events. Senior diver Heather Cleevly paced the Tar Heels with wins in the one-meter and three-meter competitions.

Sophomore Lisa Etherington also turned in a strong performance, winning the 100 free (55.44) and taking part in the 200 medley relay (1:56.84).

The ACC Championships take place at UNC's Koury Natatorium Feb. 6-8 for the women and Feb. 13-15 for the men.
