Hooga's guide to beDeviling Duke

Seventeen and oh. Undeatable, but not undefeatable. Duke will play North Carolina on Wednesday in the Dean E. Smith Center.

No team is undefeatable. Remember Nevada-Las Vegas, circa April. All that is obvious, yet needs stating in order to set up the following: The Daily Tar Heel Book on Defeating the Blue Devils.

Chapter 1: Hurley chokes again
Beating the Blue Devils requires the Duke playmaker to be harassed into the typical 1-of-10 shooting, eight-turnover outings he had against King Rice. Hurley, as the point guard, has always been important, but now he keys this team.

Christian Laettner will get his points inside or at the foul line and the Hills (Grant and Thomas) will get some points on the fast break or on occasional baskets. Duke, however, thrives when Hurley stretches defenses with his 3-point shooting, runs the break and runs the offense to get more of those occasional baskets from the Hills and Brian Davis.

North Carolina's answer will be Phelps, who has played his way into a reputation as one of the top defensive point guards in the Atlantic Coast Conference, if not the country.

Phelps' task is larger than Rice's was, however. Hurley is no longer the freshman whiner that Rice could antagonize. Now Hurley is a junior whiner, but with a bit more composure.

Chapter 2: Smith can't sleep
North Carolina has let opponents dictate the tempo and style of play at times, something the Tar Heels cannot afford to let Duke do. And while letting opponents dictate style and tempo results from inexperience, the coach needs to remind the team what it should be doing.

A good example of this was the Jan. 22 game in Raleigh. North Carolina took seven straight 3-pointers, starting with more than six minutes left in the game.

Tar Heel coach Dean Smith said following the game that he thought UNC was a good 3-point shooting team and that the shots weren't forced. But outside of Hubert Davis' perimeter shot, the 3-pointer is not the strength of the Tar Heel team.

Including Davis, UNC shoots 35.3 percent from beyond 19 feet, nine inches. Not including Davis, UNC shoots 27.9 percent from beyond that distance.

Smith typically does his best coaching job in the battle with Duke. Maybe it's because North Carolina needs it against such a top opponent, though occasionally it seems to be as much a personal battle for Smith as it is basketball.

Blue Devil coach Mike Krzyzewski has built such a successful program that it has replaced North Carolina as the nation's premier program in the minds of many people. That probably irks a competitor like Smith and gives him even extra incentive to beat Duke — to prove UNC's superiority.

Chapter 3: Height outdoes quickness

Two seasons ago, North Carolina, though not in the midst of a great season by its standards, swept Duke in the regular season games because it used its superior height to negate the Devil quickness. UNC would be wise to try to do that again this season.

The Tar Heels have a size advantage this season with 7-footers Eric Montross, Kevin Salvadori and Matt Wenstrom to go with 6-7 George Lynch on the interior. And while Duke has some bigger players to create some sizable lineups (6-11 Laettner, 6-11 Cherokee Parks and 6-10 Eric Meek), Krzyzewski prefers to keep opponents from dictating his lineups. A Laettner-Parks-Meek lineup has not been common for Krzyzewski.

However, UNC could force Duke to use its bigger lineup, if the Tar Heel height can dominate the boards. If North Carolina can control the boards, that would halt the Duke fast break, limit the Blue Devil quickness edge and give the Tar Heels second-chance baskets on the offensive end, too.

Conclusion: Free throws are key

Duke has outsourced its opponents by 234 points at the free throw line, meaning the free-throw line is equivalent to a 13.7 points-per-game scorer for the Blue Devils. If North Carolina can keep even with the Blue Devils at the free throw line, that would equal holding Duke's double-digit scorer to no points.

To h-I-I with it all. Duke 88, North Carolina 75.

Softball

scholarship outputs.

In 1972, the Department of Health, Education and Welfare approved Title IX of the Education Amendments. The statute, designed to eliminate sex discrimination at educational institutions that receive federal funding, has led to unprecedented growth in women's athletics throughout the past two decades.

Kathryn Reith, communications director for the Women's Sports Foundation, said that under Title IX, baseball and softball funding did not necessarily have to be equal at UNC.

"Unfortunately, the way Title IX works, you don't look at it team by team," Reith said. "The main question is whether female athletes are provided the opportunities they want."

Reith said that instead of making a direct comparison between softball and baseball, Title IX dictated that the overall male and female programs have equal funding at federally funded schools.

"If one-third of the athletes are female and two-thirds are male, then females must get a third of the scholarship dollars," Reith said. "In terms of overall numbers of scholarships, they are probably in compliance."

Despite the softball team's low scholarship total, UNC female athletes received scholarships at a virtually equitable rate for the 1991-92 year:

■ 223 females accounted for 36.4 percent of UNC's varsity athletes.

■ Female athletes received 94 scholarships, 33.3 percent of UNC's total.

For female athletes to receive 36.4 percent of the scholarships as Title IX would call for in this situation, they would have to be given an additional 13.5 scholarships for the 1991-92 year.

But Reith said interpretations of Title IX took the massive size of college football programs into account when deciding whether a school was in compliance. At UNC, the football team was granted 95 scholarships, one more than the entire women's program received.

Senior shortstop Julie O'Shields said this was the first year she had received any scholarship money. "I love to play softball, and I'm going to play softball whether I get scholarship money or not," she said.

But O'Shields said the scholarship shortage bothered her.

"Other teams are of more priority than we are right now," she said. "I don't know what it's going to take for someone to say, 'Hey, this is ridiculous."

These girls deserve more than three scholarships."

Papa said she understood how the University viewed her program.

"They've never really told me to go out and try to win a national championship," Papa said. "I kind of know where my sport is in terms of their commitment to it. I won't say I'm thrilled that I have only three scholarships, but I don't think it means they're not committed."

Smith earns 3rd straight ACC honor

Staff reports

North Carolina freshman forward Charlotte Smith garnered her third consecutive ACC Rookie-of-the-Week honor. It was her fifth such award of the season.

The 6-foot Shelby native averaged 15 points per game for the No. 10 Tar Heels, as they rolled over Wake Forest, 84-61, on Saturday. North Carolina's record stands at 16-3, 5-3 in the ACC.

Against Wake Forest, Smith notched 17 points and 10 rebounds in 22 minutes. Against the Demon Deacons, Smith overcame foul trouble to tally 13 points and seven boards. For the week, Smith shot at a 60-percent clip.

On the year, Smith is averaging 14.1 ppg, good for 15th in the league, to go along with 8.2 rebounds (fourth in the ACC).

UNC-Wake tickets still available

Tickets for Saturday's men's basketball game between UNC and Wake Forest at the Smith Center are still available at the Smith Center ticket office.

Tar Heels make national squads

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo. — Four current and former North Carolina field hockey players were selected for the U.S. National Team and for the U.S. Under-21 team.

Sophomore goalkeeper Peggy Storrar, from Mahopac, N.Y., was picked for the Under-21 squad. Storrar has a career goals-against average of 1.19 in 46 games, including 16 shut-outs.

Junior Amy Cox, a center midfielder from Houston, will be on both the U.S. National Team and the Under-21 team. Cox, UNC's leading returning scorer with seven goals and seven assists, was a second-team All-American last season.

Cox led the Tar Heels to their ninth consecutive ACC Championship and to their third straight NCAA title game. UNC finished with a record of 15-6-1.

North Carolina lost 2-0 to Old Dominion in the 1991 NCAA final last year.

Leslie Lyness and Laurel Hershey, both of whom played on UNC's 1989 national championship squad, were tabbed for the National Team for the third straight year.

Lyness, a Paoli, Pa., native, was the Honda Broderick Cup winner for field hockey in 1990 and had her jersey retired.

Hershey was a three-time All-

America pick for the Tar Heels.

The U.S. National Team will not play in the 1992 Olympics but will compete in several international tournaments this summer. The Under-21 team will take part in the Junior World Cup Qualifier, Sept. 8-20 in Caracas, Venezuela.
