The Big One: UNC vs. Duke

By Stewart Chisam
Assistant Sports Editor

Call off the NCAA Tournament! Duke can't be beat. If I had my druthers, that'd be the headline for this story, which previews tonight's Duke-North Carolina basketball game. Tipoff for the ESPN-covered contest is at 9 in the Smith Center. The wanna-be headline, in my mind at least, beckons to that clunky cliché, "On any given night, any team can beat any other team."

The cliché connection started last Feb. 12 when The National ran what became a Truman/Dewey-esque headline: "CALL OFF THE NCAA TOURNAMENT! UNLV CAN'T BE BEAT."

Of course, the editors at the now-defunct all-sports newspaper — apparently ecstatic over the Runnin' Rebs' 112-105 not-as-close-as-the-score-indicated shellacking of No. 2 Arkansas two days before — jumped the gun in declaring the national champ two months early.

March 30, Duke won the un-winnable. The Devils downed Vegas 79-77 in the national semifinals before taking the title two days later with a 72-65 victory against Kansas.

Since then, Duke — the latest team that can't be beat — has rattled off 17 wins in 17 games, staying atop every poll all season. During that stretch, the Devils, 8-0 in the ACC, have gone nearly unchallenged, struggling only in an overtime matchup at Michigan and at Florida State Thursday — a game in which the Seminoles kept within striking distance until the last two minutes, when Duke blew it open to win 75-62.

Until someone proves otherwise, Duke has become 1991-92's Squad That Can't Be Beat. Granted, it's a historically dubious title, but here's what the Devils have done to deserve it:

- Blown out their opponents by an average of 22.4 points per game.
- Defeated six Top 25 teams.
- Connected on 74.7 percent of their free throws.
- Run off a school-record 23 straight wins, having last lost March 10, when North Carolina upended the Devils 96-74 in the finals of the ACC Tournament.
- Led the ACC in scoring, scoring margin, field-goal percentage, free-throw percentage, 3-point-field-goal percentage and turnover margin.
- Compiled 86 dunks, including 34 by sophomore Grant Hill.
- Defeated each of the three teams North Carolina has lost to (Florida State,

It's time to stir up Dome

Does anyone else remember when, right after UNC's 99-88 loss at N.C. State Jan. 22, a Wolfpack fan darted onto the floor and "exchanged pleasantries" with North Carolina coach Dean Smith?

Wouldn't it be nice?

The game wasn't even over when the Reynolds Coliseum rowdy raced onto the hardwood to catch Smith before Wolfpack coach Les Robinson had a chance to talk to Smith.

Wouldn't it be great?

Chaos — not the bad kind, just good old-fashioned celebrating — followed that small incident on the Reynolds floor. Students stormed the court in hopes of getting a hand on State's biggest giant-killer, Tom Gugliotta.

Five minutes after the game, Tar Heel Sports Network radio announcer Mick Mixon said he couldn't see any of the floor because of the mob reveling in the upset win. The party didn't end anytime soon.

Why should UNC students not be given the same opportunity to ask Duke coach Mike Krzyzewski, "How are the wife and kids?" or "Gotten that trophy stored away safely yet?" or "Why do you look like a rat?" after a UNC upset?

But even if you don't get to have a few words with Coach K, it would still be cool to rush the floor and high-five with the likes of Davis, Lynch and Phelps if the Tar Heels won. The Smith Center officials would have a cow, but who cares?

Remember, the Dean Dome used to be called the Dean E. Smith Student Activities Center. Student Activities, apparently because the higher-ups wanted none of it whatsoever, was removed from the arena's name after one year.

The point is, the beloved Blue Devils come to the Smith Center only once a year. The loud, organized and utterly classless Duke fans get to crowd the floor at Cameron Indoor Stadium after every game.

If UNC beats Duke, why shouldn't the Tar Heel faithful be allowed to whoop it up at the Smith Center before the fiesta shifts to Franklin Street?

Linda Woods, Smith's secretary, wanted me to tell readers to make some noise for tonight's showdown.

Then she paused. "But then again," said Woods, "we should be loud for every game because we don't want the people at Duke to think they're so important."

The only problem is, them Blue Devils are pretty darn important. They're the defending national champions, and they have had only two scares this season on the way to a 17-0 record.

Oh, one more thing. Yes, the building kills sound and the alumni have a ton of lower-level seats, but all of us are guilty of being a little too quiet at games. Get to the game early and yell 'till you're hoarse.

Why do you think Duke is so good in Cameron? Yeah, the team is decent, but the crowd is great. There's no reason you can't be at least half as good in the Smith Center tonight.

Notre Dame and N.C. State) by an average margin of 23.3 points.

The names behind this onslaught are familiar to college basketball fans: All-American Christian Laettner, All-ACC guard Bobby Hurley and the high-reaching Hills — Grant and Thomas (no relation). That foursome accounts for 64.6 points per game, with Laettner pouring in 21.3 ppg, Hurley tallying 13.4 and the Hills hitting 15.0 (Thomas) and 14.9 (Grant). The rest of the team combines for 24.8 ppg, most of those from senior Brian Davis (9 ppg) and freshman Cherokee Parks (8).

Hurley, averaging 7.6 assists per game, needs only two dishes for points to break Tommy Amaker's school record of 708, set from 1984-1987. A junior, Hurley tallied his 1,000th point in the Devils' 100-71 victory against Notre Dame Saturday.

All in all, the numbers are stacked not only for Hurley to get his two assists tonight, but for Duke to get its 18th win, and then its 19th Saturday against Louisiana State and then its 20th Feb. 12 versus Georgia Tech and then its ...

Of course, that's the way the numbers fall when you're playing the Squad That Can't Be Beat.

Then again, that's the way the numbers were falling 51 weeks ago when Vegas made the cover of a near-bankrupt newspaper a month before March Madness had even started.

9 p.m., Smith Center Raycom: Ch.'s 2, 5	UNC	Edge	DUKE
Backcourt	Ever-confident Derrick Phelps won't back down from Bobby Hurley and Co. He can't afford to. Senior Hubert Davis would savor a repeat of the Tar Heels' blowout of Duke March 10.		Forget the funny face: Bobby Hurley can play. Duke has won 83 percent of its games with Mr. Jersey City at the point. Junior Thomas Hill has hit 59.1 percent of his shots at the '2' spot.
Frontcourt	Can Eric Montross neutralize Christian Laettner? Will George Lynch continue his solid play? Will Brian Reese surge to stardom with the game of his life? If the answers are yes, UNC wins.		Christian Laettner tallies 21.3 ppg but has only one double-double this season. Sophomore Grant Hill leads the ACC in field-goal percentage (64.3). Brian Davis' key asset is experience.
Depth	Kevin Salvadori's shot-blocking will be invaluable vs. Laettner. Henrik Rödl will be counted on to clamp down on Hurley. Pat Sullivan's hustle and 'D' make him one of Dean's favorites.		Cherokee Parks' height (6-foot-11) will help offset UNC's twin-tower advantage. Forward Antonio Lang has improved since struggling early. Reverse that sentiment for Marty Clark.
Defense	With a school-record nine steals vs. Georgia Tech, Phelps cemented his stature as one of the ACC's best defenders. Lynch, Montross and Salvadori need to form a wall inside.	EVEN	Duke will hound UNC in the backcourt as much or more than UNC will hound Duke, which is quite a bit. Opponents have out-fouled the Devils 423-292. Laettner leads the team in steals (18).
Coaching	Dean Smith takes the Duke game personally, especially in the building named after him. Nevertheless, Duke is the only team with a winning record vs. UNC in the Smith Center (3-2).		Krzyzewski doesn't have 700 wins, and Duke has yet to build a Coach K Center. Still, with 195 wins, five Final Fours and an NCAA title in the last six years, K has made a letter for himself.
