At the end of the meeting, Rep. Chandra Bastia made a motion to rescind CGLA's budget, but the motion failed by a vote of 12-10. If the motion had passed, CGLA would have been defunded completely.

The CGLA budget hearing caused a heated debate. One congress member, Kevin Hunter, Dist. 14, expressed his discomfort with being surrounded by CGLA supporters and changed seats with another member, Daryl Grissom, Dist. 18. At the end of the debate, Rep. Eric Pratt, Dist. 22, called CGLA supporters faggots. Rep. Elliott Zenick, Dist. 17, asked speaker pro tempore Mark Shelburne to reprimand Pratt, but Shelburne said he would address the

"We have a whole staff of development officers," said Nancy Davis, Bicentennial Campaign chairwoman. "The development office has a number of development officers working on projects all across campus, so that's already being covered."

Charles Button, director of the University recycling program, said Moody's proposal for more on-campus recycling stations was unnecessary and based on speculation.

"(Moody is) obviously unaware that we've gone from 10 sites to over 50," Button said. "It's not that he doesn't have a fine idea, but his idea is already happening." There are nearly 40 on-campus recycling stations, and between 10 and 15 sites off campus, Button said. But reaction to the candidates' plat-

The committee recommended that departments increase the numbers of minority doctoral candidates and fellowship holders and encourage undergraduates who might want to go to graduate school, Noblit said.

University officials should urge other universities to encourage minorities so UNC could recruit minority graduate students from other schools, he said.

Tracking undergraduate enrollment and reaching into N.C. high schools are also necessary, Noblit said. But Paul Farel, physiology professor, said that almost all universities were trying to recruit minorities, but no department has distinguished itself by the number of faculty members alone, he "My point is that if you want to increase diversity, you're following the
