At least 26 confirmed dead in USAir crash

NEW YORK — Rescuers on Monday braved smoldering fire, rising tide and falling snow, but found only bodies — some still strapped in the seats of a USAir jet that crashed into icy Flushing Bay, killing at least 26 people.

As the grim collection wound down Monday at La Guardia Airport, it appeared luck was all that separated the dead from the 24 injured survivors. One passenger was missing.

"I was amazed so many people survived," said fire Capt. John Kurtz, who arrived shortly after the crash. "There were bodies burnt to a crisp and bodies cut in half, and then there were people walking around."

Rescue divers had little to show for their effort save two "black box" flight recorders aboard the Cleveland-bound plane. National Transportation Safety Council investigators said they did not know what caused the crash.

According to witnesses, the jet had just begun to lift off the runway Sunday night when it slammed back to the ground, veered sharply to the left and crashed over an embankment.

The nose, wing and engine snapped off, and the rest of the plane exploded and skidded into the water.

Fire

Firefighters and Carrboro police evacuated the entire BB section, dragging some residents out through their windows, Swiger said.

Other residents had to jump from apartments on the second and third floors, he said.

Roofs collapsed on several firefighters, but Swiger said no firefighters were injured.

Tom Dominick, a Woodbridge resident who was asleep when the fire broke out, said a friend called him and told him to get out.

"I didn't know there was a fire until I got on the deck," he said.

Dominick still smelled of smoke from the early morning fire. He had gone to a friend's Woodbridge apartment after the fire, but low water-pressure levels in the complex prevented him from taking a shower, he said.

"You just don't have anywhere to go," Dominick said.

A Woodbridge resident, who declined to be named, said she was shocked when she returned to her apartment after work about noon.

"I thought I'd lost absolutely everything but I didn't," she said. "I lost my material possessions but my pictures are still there. They're wet but they're salvageable."

She said she was unsure where she would spend Monday night.

Julie Stepanic, a Woodbridge leasing consultant, said the apartment management would provide hotel accommodations for residents not staying with friends or relatives.

At least 19 residents were evacuated, she said, adding that the management would move displaced residents into vacant Woodbridge apartments.

Swiger said he could not estimate the monetary loss caused by the fire but said the building sustained heavy damage.

ally seizes a motif that fires the imagination, a picture, an image. It's alliterative, picturesque speech. It produces an image in the consciousness and sparks that fire."

Although call and response and repetition helped motivate congregations, at the bedrock of the movement was an unshakable faith in a just God, Turner said.

The congregations have "a fundamental belief in God, not in the Constitution, not in people, but that God's gonna eventually make it right because God is true and real and just," Turner said.

"That God is going to move is something the black church never allowed to come into question," he added. "That was a given of faith, that God is good, that God is all-powerful, that God will come through in the end."

"It sits with the presupposition that righteousness and justice will prevail."

nia system. The insurance for each graduate employee costs the school $310 and covers the student for the entire year, she said.

"Our university health service people were able to get a very good deal," Soc said. "They started working on this five years ago."

The university covers 2,800 graduate student employees, although the Berkeley plan recently was expanded to include all students, she said.

The University of California at Los Angeles pays about $500 per year per student for health insurance coverage, she said.

UNC's Graduate Students United support a plan that would cost $582 a year for 2,200 to 2,400 graduate student employees.

Soc said graduate students must meet certain requirements in order to be included in Berkeley's coverage.

"They must be registered students and work 25-percent time or greater in one of eight titles," she said. A full-time position at the university qualifies as 100-percent time.

The titles include graduate student instructor, graduate student researcher, tutor and teaching fellow, she said.

The University of Wisconsin at Madison also funds health insurance coverage for graduate student employees.

Jean Moral, administrative program specialist at the University of Wisconsin, said the university offered seven different types of coverage ranging from nothing to $200 for family coverage.

"We do offer health insurance to graduate students who have an appointment of 33-percent time and at least six months or a semester on the payroll," Moral said.

The coverage at Wisconsin is offered only to teaching assistants, research assistants and project assistants and does not include other student employees.
