dosage levels below the presently approved FDA standards, the article states. Ward-Grobes would not comment on the studies.

Colby said the FDA's approval of food irradiation despite the questionable results of the studies was "unconscionable," and shows the FDA's lack of credibility.

"The FDA is very prone to mistakes," he said. "In the 1980s, the FDA is more a political body than a scientific body."

Everett said that irradiated foods produced by the Vindicator plant were safe

Weaver

Gordon said he thought consumers, not the state, would decide the issue. "I really believe that this will be settled in the marketplace," he said. "Consumers have a choice to buy or not to buy."

Doonesbury

Food Lion has received requests from consumers to carry irradiated foods and sees no reason to ban them, said Michael Mazingo, corporate spokesman. "We feel that the (FDA) has done more than an adequate job," he said.
