to commit suicide, Stemper said. The death of a relative or the breakup of a romance are just two changes that can cause depression, she said.

But Stemper warned that although suicide was not something to joke about, one should distinguish between chronic and situational depression.

"Just because someone's said they're going to commit suicide, you don't have enough reason to force them to go to counseling," she said.

Stemper said the most effective way to help a depressed person was to listen to them or take them to counseling.

She added that one could determine the seriousness of the suicide threat by considering whether the person had a history of suicide attempts, a plan for lor for student affairs, University Police the planning, he said.

Luse said that although he was hopeful the new policy would deter violence, there still were problems controlling security outside the Union during parties. "We certainly have physical limitations to what we can do right now," he said. "We can keep someone from entering the Great Hall with a gun, but it's not so easy getting them out of the building."

don't have crash bars on them, the building exits cannot be completely secured Luse said. "At a lot of schools, once you leave the building, you can't come back in to get to the party," he said. "We really can't do that because the doors don't have crash bars, and the facility just isn't set up that way.' The new policy will get its first test tonight when the Black Student Movement sponsors a party that is scheduled from 10:30 p.m. to 1:30 a.m. Curtis said he and BSM President Michelle Thomas were planning to meet next week to discuss the policy's effectiveness. "We're going to see how things go (tonight) and discuss possible changes and adjustments," he said. "The most important thing here is that everybody's happy and everybody's safe,"

Derby said it was important for students and other UNC dining hall customers to voice their needs and concerns to the food service staff.

"We really encourage customers to tell us what they want," Derby said. "We have comment boxes, and we've responded to students' requests in the last year.

Kurt Hoffman, food services manager at Seconds, Please!, said he needed student input to help decide whether the changes were what students wanted.

"What I must rely on now in taking the next step is student input," Hoffman said. "The critical thing down here is student input. Our new approach is to do what it takes to satisfy the customer.

committing the act, the resources to do it or refused to communicate.

If the answer to all of these questions is "yes," a professional should be contacted for counseling, Stemper said.

If the situation seems especially dangerous and the suicidal friend is unwilling to talk about it, one could petition the Chapel Hill magistrate. A custody order would allow the person to be transported to the nearest facility equipped with psychological services. But Stemper warned that other options should be considered before one turns to the law.

"You don't want to underreact, but you certainly don't want to overreact," she said.

Williams said concerned friends often hesitated to help a suicidal friend because they did not want to betray their friend's trust
