

Festifall to feature performances, crafts on Franklin Street

It's that time of year again when the trees radiate with orange and red, the air turns chilly, and the Chapel Hill Parks and Recreation Department sponsors Festifall.

Sangam

Sangam's vice president, Mohak Dave, said Sangam members wanted to help the BCC garner support of other minority groups. "As an organization, we strongly believe it is a step forward for minority rights," Dave said.

Ghosh said Sangam had not decided how it would give support, but it would make a decision at a future date. "The overall objective and goal of the BCC is what we voted to support," he said.

Charles McNair, BSM minister of information and a leader in the coalition for a free-standing BCC, said he thought Sangam's vote was a sign that advocates of a multicultural center did not understand that the BCC movement was not just a black issue.

"I hope this will help some people who are arguing for a multicultural center instead of a black cultural center put their fears to rest," McNair said.

Scott Wilkens, Campus Y co-president, said he was excited about the vote. "This visibly broadens the support of the BCC on campus," he said.

department's arts and crafts fair, will be held from 1 p.m. to 6 p.m. Sunday.

The rain date is Oct. 11. More than 200 booths, containing a wide range of handcrafted items and art originals, will be set up along West Franklin Street, between Mallette and Graham streets.

Food vendors also will be on hand to provide Festifall-goers with refreshments during the five-hour affair.

In addition to the arts and crafts exhibits, some local musicians will provide live entertainment.

At 1 p.m., the Alan MacDonald Band will perform on the Tar Heel stage located at Mallette Street.

They will be followed by Kingfish at 2:15 p.m., Plutopia at 3:30 p.m. and the Apple Chill Cloggers with the Lightning Cider Band at 4:45 p.m.

On the Graham stage located at Graham Street, Steven Michael Jack will perform a folk routine at 1 p.m. He will be followed by McKeel & Goy at 2 p.m., Ada Khoury at 3 p.m. and Bahlooka Roux at 4 p.m.

Street performances will be held at "Under the Hands" next to Chapel Hill Cleaners.

The Village Band will perform from 1 p.m. to 2:45 p.m., followed by the Bouncing Bulldogs from 2 p.m. to 2:45 p.m., and the Salsa Nights from 3:15 p.m. to 4 p.m.

The Square Heels will perform from 4:30 p.m. to 5:30 p.m. and the Dance Makers from 5:30 p.m. to 6 p.m.

Festifall also will feature children's activity booths, roving musicians, original Festifall T-shirts, medieval jousting and dance, and international and "down home" foods.

About 20,000 people attended Festifall last year.

said Thursday that his business experience would help to update the council on current business issues.

"The council needs to know that small businesses exist," he said.

Tripodi added that most council members were not involved in running businesses and that therefore, they made decisions using outdated figures.

"I can give information to council about small businesses," he said. "Council needs a person that works in business day to day."

Tripodi said most small businesses in Chapel Hill were running 25 percent to 30 percent below last year's revenues, and that council members needed to know updated information in order to make qualified decisions on sales tax, replanning tax bases and zoning laws.

"There's no enthusiasm on council to do these things," Tripodi said.

Tripodi also said he would focus on employment. "(Chapel Hill) has no home-grown employees," he said. "Students fill positions, but when Thanksgiving and Christmas come, there is not a work force to fill those positions."

Tripodi said he would be able to inform the council on how to increase a home-grown work force through low-income housing and other incentives.

The "missing ingredient" on the council is decision-making, Tripodi said, adding that he thought it was a quality he could bring to the council.

Tripodi has lived in Chapel Hill for 13 years and has been active on numerous town boards and committees, including the Chapel Hill-Carrboro Chamber of Commerce, the N.C. High School Athletic Association and the Kirkwood Homeowners Association. He also has owned and operated Tripodi's Delicatessen for 10 years.

Two other Chapel Hill residents, David Strevel and Eleanor Roland, submitted their applications Wednesday.

Strevel, a Chapel Hill resident since 1987, said he thought his background in business and engineering would be useful on the council.

Strevel's business and engineering experience includes serving as president of a non-profit student-housing corporation at the University of Michigan.

Strevel also has served as management services officer of the Philadelphia Housing Development Corporation and as president of the Chapel Hill Flying Club. He has been a computer consultant to the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency.

"Budgeting and management are skills that I think I could bring to the job," Strevel said Thursday. "I am burning to get in there and implement."

Strevel said his experience in housing and engineering would allow him to bring information to the council about issues such as town water and the University power plant.

Strevel also stressed the need for good relations between the council and other governmental agencies.

"One issue I feel like hasn't been done well over the years is maintaining good relations with county and state government," he said. "I find it baffling why these groups do so much squabbling."

Roland, a Chapel Hill resident since 1978, is employed as a research psychologist at Research Triangle Institute. She serves as vice chairwoman of the Orange County Commission on Women and is a past president of the Planned Parenthood of Orange and Durham counties.
