Poll

Both campaigns agree that the low profile of the race was a primary reason for the majority percentage of undecided voters.

"Wicker's name identification is low among college campuses," said Kaye Gattis, a spokeswoman for the Wicker campaign. "People know more about the presidential race, and students have just focused on it because it is more enticing."

Although the Pope campaign credits the amount of undecided voters to the low profile of the office, they contend that Pope's lack of support was probably a result of the liberalism of the UNC campus.

"Republicans have traditionally lost Orange County, but it's something that doesn't hurt us on the state level," said Scott Place, Pope's campaign manager.

Clinton holds 2-1 lead

Despite the large numbers of undecided voters in the state races, students seem confident about their decisions in the presidential election.

have strong environmental leaders at the national level, nothing can occur without environmental leaders at the local level," he said.

Ross Bluestein, deputy president of GreenVote and deputy chairman of the National Toxics campaign, gave opening remarks, telling the crowd about what he said was Bush's weak environmental effectiveness.

Bluestein said Bush compromised the nation's wetlands and extended the cleanup time of toxic waste sites 25 years. "When you go to the polls, don't read President Bush's lips," he said. "Look at his (environmental) record."

Several endorsed candidates spoke at the rally, including Marc Marcoplos, an independent candidate for Orange County Commissioner.

Marcoplos said he was involved in the solid-waste crisis in the country. He hopes to reduce landfills, he said. "We're on the verge of a really progressive policy," he said.

N.C. Rep. Joe Hackney, D-Orange, recently named the top environmentalist in the N.C. House of Representatives by Independent magazine, spoke about his desire to implement the Clean Air Act and establish more parks throughout the state.

N.C. Sen. Howard Lee, D-Orange, said he wanted to reduce pollution by increasing mass-transit systems in the state.

Other candidates who appeared at the rally to accept the GreenVote endorsement were N.C. Rep. Anne Barnes, D-Orange, N.C. Rep. Russell Walker, D-Orange, and representatives for N.C. attorney general candidate Mike Easley and former N.C. Gov. Jim Hunt. A representative from the Clinton/Gore campaign also attended and accepted the group's endorsement.

When polled, only about 4 percent didn't know whom they would vote for, while about 27 percent of those who said they planned to vote said they were going to vote for Republican President George Bush and about 55 percent said they supported Democrat Bill Clinton. About 14 percent planned to vote for Independent Ross Perot.

A 4.9-percent margin of error was calculated for this poll.

"I think we have to realize that the numbers are very consistent with that done by our informal student pollsters," said Ronda Raney, press secretary for Clinton's N.C. headquarters. "This generation realizes the country can't continue to proceed as it is and there must be change," she said. "In the words of Bill Clinton, it is the first generation to do worse than their parents."

There is unprecedented strength and enthusiasm among N.C. college students for the Democratic ticket, she said. "We've not seen this in years," Raney said.

While the Bush campaign declined to comment on the poll, a Perot coordinator blasted the poll for being factually incorrect.

Bailey Mundy, N.C. Perot coordinator, said that with a 76-percent response rate, 24 percent of the sample could have been Perot supporters. "You have to account for 100 percent of the people, and without this, statistically it isn't factual information," he said.

Campus politicians were concerned about their peers' indecision.

"On the one hand, it makes me feel happy about the presidential results because it gets them to the polls, but they have to realize that they can't just vote the top of the ticket," said Katherine Wilson, president of the UNC Young Democrats. "You have to vote for people other than just the president ..., but people are not aware of these campaigns because there is so much focus on the presidential election."

Wendy Mohr, co-chairwoman of the UNC Young Republicans, also voiced concern that people were not educated about the candidates for state offices.

"People really just don't know who the candidates are, but if anyone grabbed the undecided vote, they would have the race sewn up," she said.

Beyle said the overpowering effect of the presidential race that results in a lack of knowledge about lower-profile state races was one of the arguments for removing state elections from the presidential ballot.

Disturbance

the coffin were the words, "Women dying from back-alley abortions is not pro-life."

Abortion-rights demonstrators and Clinton supporters got into shouting matches with Bush supporters at the Students for America rally.

The Students for America rally ended shortly before University Police officers arrived to tell the group they were violating UNC policy by not registering the demonstration and by making excessive noise.

Officers went to the scene after receiving several complaints, mostly from Davis Library officials, said Capt. Ollie Bowler. "What we wanted was for the problem to go away," he said.

Students for America did not properly reserve the area, Bowler said.

But Bartley said he thought the rally did not need to be registered with Union officials because it was not in the Pit area.

Officials from the Union reservation office said that because the area was outside of their jurisdiction, representatives of the group had been told earlier in the week to request permission from the Facilities Management Office.

Officials in the Facilities Management Office said they had received no request from any political group to use the Davis Library space.

second-round match at 3 p.m. Saturday. Duke (13-3-2) currently ranks seventh nationally, and the Wolfpack (15-4-1) places 12th.

Blue Devil coach Bill Hempen won't look beyond Saturday's match. "We don't really want to look toward a possible matchup with North Carolina in the championship since we've never beaten N.C. State."

Wolfpack head coach Larry Gross expects a tough match from the Blue Devils

"We've got to shut down their three very good strikers," Gross said. "If we can do that and fight through the pressure that they're going to give us as a home team, I think we'll be fine. But Duke's a very good team, and it should be a one-goal game either way."
