The Schools

One of the consequences of the great reduction in the appropriations for public education is the loss by the North Carolina schools of some of their ablest administrators and teachers.

It is simply a matter of arithmetic and commonsense: when a superintendent or a principal or a teacher has had his pay reduced by 50 per cent or more, and has the offer of a far better reward either in the schools of another state or in some other occupation, naturally he makes the change. He is practically compelled to, in order to support himself and his family without running into debt.

Except for Asheville, every one of the eight largest cities in the state has lost within the last year or so either the superintendent or a principal. Supt. Strygley of Raleigh has gone to Nashville, Tenn.; Supt. Oscar Hamilton of Wilmington has gone into the book business; Principal C. W. Phillips of Greensboro has gone into business. Principal Johnson of High Point has gone to New Jersey. Among others who have left the schools are Supt. Siske of Duplin; Supt. Fitzgerald of Pitt; Supt. Coltrane of Salisbury, and Supt. Latham of Winston-Salem. The complete list is much longer; we give only a few names here.

We know of a teacher in one of the state's largest cities, a man with a wife and child, who prepared himself thoroughly for the teaching profession and holds a Ph. D. degree—and he is now receiving a salary of $720 a year, the maximum teacher's salary allowed under the schedule fixed by the state school commission.

A case cited by the "North Carolina Teacher" is that of a young man whose pay was brought down to just half what it had been when he began teaching eight years before. A textile plant offered him a job with a much better salary, and he took it.

The state is failing to provide decent support for the schools for the simple reason that the state hasn't got the money. Even after the imposition of a general sales tax, the revenues are inadequate; and there is considerable protest against the sales tax and a determined effort, in some quarters, to have it repealed by the next legislature.

Without doubt the public school structure that has been built up so laboriously within the last generation has been seriously damaged, and the prospect for repairs and rebuilding is anything but bright. What is to be the solution of the problem? As with other problems in these distressful days, nobody knows. Apparently, all the friends of the schools can do is to hope and pray for the return of prosperity.

Drama December 7, 8, and 9

The Carolina Playmakers will present four original plays December 7, 8, and 9: "Shadows of Industry," by V. C. Royster; "Sing Your Own Song," by Nat Farnsworth; "Everglades and Hickory," by John Alexander; and "The Head-Axe of Ingel." The first three were written in playwriting courses here; the last is by a member of F. H. Koch's class last summer at the University of Colorado. Presi-

North Carolina's Vote

The creation of this belief was the chief feature of the strategy of the anti-repeal leaders. It was a daring move, because, if the majority went against them, they would be in the position, at the next meeting of the legislature, of having accepted the 1933 vote as a vote on state prohibition; and this would justify the legislature in repealing the Turrlington act. As it is today, the drys can point to their great majority as evidence that the people of North Carolina are determined to keep this act on the books.

Of course the outcome of Tuesday's election will not have any effect upon the status of liquor in North Carolina. Liquor is plentiful today, and it will continue to be plentiful.

The Turrlington act will continue to prevent legal sales, and will thereby prevent the state from getting the revenue it could get under a system of control, but there will be an immense volume of illegal sales for the benefit of the bootleggers. A large proportion of the state officials and members of the legislature will still drink, as they do now, and the same will be true of tens of thousands of other citizens in all walks of life, high and low. North Carolina has never had Prohibition, or even a near approach to it, in reality; but it appears that a large majority of its citizens want to keep Prohibition on the statute books, anyway.

The churchmen who preached against repeal are happy over the result. The members of the Anti-Saloon League and the W. C. T. U. are happy. Ex-Senators Simmons and Morrison are happy at being on the winning side again. And naturally the bootleggers are happy at having the electorate give their trade a new lease on life.

Back in the summer, about three months ago, it was considered almost certain, by drys as well as wets, that North Carolina would go for repeal. The repealists then proceeded to do nothing, and the anti-repealists went to work. The repealists trusted to the strong national tide against Prohibition, to the prestige and popularity of President Roosevelt, and to the help of the local Democratic organizations throughout the state. In many counties these organizations failed to function; in some they actually favored the anti-repeal side. Instead of making a genuine effort, about all the repealists did was to issue predictions of victory.

The anti-repealists, on the contrary, attacked their task with vigor and did not let up on it a minute. They enlisted the aid of the churches. They fed news and arguments to the press. They had an active organization in every county, and these organizations distributed anti-repeal circulars and bulletins among the voters by the tens of thousands.

No one can say which of many factors was most important in the campaign, but I should say that probably the churches, with their journals and their allied leagues and societies, exerted the greatest influence. They raked the country-side with alarms and appeals and watchwords and slogans, painting a picture of Righteousness in a death struggle with the Liquor Devil, and the faithful flocked to the polls to cast their ballots for Righteousness.

Then, there was the Republican vote, which is normally about 40 per cent of the total vote in North Carolina. Presi-

A. A. U. W. Supper

Will Be Given Next Wednesday Evening: 35 Cents a Plate

The November meeting of the American Association of University Women will take the form of a supper at 7 o'clock in the Episcopal parish house, next Tuesday. The fee for each person will be 35 cents.

The supper is an innovation this year on the part of the program committee, which is trying to provide more occasions for social intercourse and getting acquainted with new members. In the spring there will be another supper, or possibly a picnic.

The other monthly meetings will continue as usual, with speakers on timely topics. It is voted that some of these meetings may be held in the afternoon, others in the evening, at the discretion of the committee. Refreshments will be omitted.

If any of the members, or those eligible for membership, failed to get postcard notices of the supper, they are asked to let Mrs. L. DeR. MacMillan (telephone 7481) know by Saturday noon if they are coming.

Officers and chairmen for the year are Miss Cornelia S. Love, president; Mrs. S. W. Preston, vice-president; Mrs. L. DeR. MacMillan, secretary; Mrs. W. F. Ferger, treasurer; Mrs. G. T. Schwenning, chairman of the program committee; Mrs. P. C. Farrar, chairman of the ways and means committee.

A Legion Supper

Feast Tomorrow Evening Will Close Armistice Day Celebration

The Armistice Day celebration will close with a joint supper of the American Legion and the American Legion Auxiliary at 6:30 tomorrow evening in the campaign he made dozens of speeches, but they seemed to have no appreciable effect. His own home county of Buncombe went against him by around 3,000.—L. G.

A Legion Supper

Feast Tomorrow Evening Will Close Armistice Day Celebration

Commander Phipps says that Mrs. A. H. Graham of Hillsboro has consented to sing for the gathering. Mrs. Graham is a vocalist of rare talent. It is hoped that Congressman W. B. Umstead will be present to make a brief speech.

Reservations must be made in advance. Whoever wants to attend should telephone Mrs. S. A. Nathan or Mrs. John Keller or Commander Phipps or Mrs. Phipps.

The next regular meeting of the Auxiliary will be next Friday evening, November 17, in Hillsboro. While the men of the Legion post are meeting in the high school the women will be the guests of Mrs. R. B. Hayes.

Armistice Day

(Continued from first page) President Graham, and other notables. The World War veterans, not in uniform, but wearing overseas caps of paper which the Commander will have distributed among them, will march on foot. Confederate veterans, if any respond to the invitation, Spanish War veterans and Gold Star Mothers will ride in floats. The women of the American Legion Auxiliary will march on foot. They will be followed by other floats—probably those of the D.A.R., the U.D.C., and the Red Cross. Then the Boy Scouts, the Boys' Band of Carrboro, and a platoon of children, boys and girls, on bicycles decorated with bunting.

Prizes have been offered by some of the merchants to the children whose bicycles are the most prettily decorated.

Rev. Alfred S. Lawrence will conduct the devotional part of the memorial exercises in Gerard hall. Major Armstrong's address will follow the short period of silence in commemoration of the World War dead. Mrs. W. S. Bernard will present the U.D.C. prize medal.

John M. Booker is chairman of the joint University faculty and the Legion post committee which arranged the program.

Mrs. Rees's Salisbury Exhibit

Under and by virtue of the power of sale contained in a mortgage executed by C. B. Greeson and Wife, Gertrude V. Greeson, to the under-signed dated February 12th, 1932, recorded in the office of Register of Deeds for Orange County in Book No. 84,
